A few years ago a son thought that for the first batch of tulips, a few thousand that we wanted in flower in early January, such as La Reine, Vermilion Brilliant and Yellow Prince, that if planted in the flats directly they arrived and the flats placed under a cool bench and covered with two inches of soil, it would save the trouble of putting them outside and they could be kept moist more easily. It was a mistake and a failure. They made no stem, while those brought in from outside in the same heat made stems of eight to twelve inches. I remember cutting Chrysolora on December 27, with 11-inch stems, but it took a lot of shade, heat and moisture to do it. However, for these hyacinths and paper whites that you expect to cut in November and December, no frost is feared and no covering, except three inches of soil, will be needed. Get some into flats at once. We never found any size of flats better suited for the purpose than one of 12x24 inches and three inches deep and this same flat is useful for many seedlings in the spring, as well as to deliver a load of bedding plants, and where we know just how many plants a bed will take, whatever size flat we use for your bulbs, we have them uniform.

Soil.

No specially prepared soil is necessary for these hyacinths and narcissi, but it should not be heavy. The soil from the carnation bench that you threw out in June will be just the thing. Don't waste room with these bulbs. You can put them in flats, almost touching. Press them firmly into the soil, leaving top of bulb and surface of soil even with edge of box.

We like to put some old strips of wood on the ground for the flats to rest on, as they lift cleaner and better. Then cover the flats with three inches of soil, but water thoroughly before covering. All that remains to be done for the next two months is never in a dry spell neglect soaking the beds at least once a week. If the soil in the flats is allowed to remain long dry, no good roots will be made. Heavy rains may help you out, but remember it takes a heavy rain to wet down three inches, and also remember there is no moisture arising from the earth which keeps alive and nourishes the roots of plants with their roots in the ground. The bottom of the flat stops all that.

Varieties.

Those who grow but a few hundred Dutch hyacinths or a few thousand tulips buy their bulbs of one of our seed houses. It is to the interest of the seed house to recommend only varieties that are known to be the most satisfactory to force, which is doubtless usually done, but it is well for the grower, however small, to know what to order.

In tulips there is no demand for a great variety and the best forcing varieties are proved and established. Omitting the Duc Van Thol varieties, which are the earliest but not worth growing, the standard varieties are La Reine, for white, in some soils and after being out a few days it assumes a beautiful shade of pink; Cottage Maid and Rose Grisde-lin are both fine pinks; Yellow Prince is all that is desired in yellow; Vermilion Brilliant is the finest scarlet, but rather expensive; if too expensive then order Waterloo for scarlet; for a gay, big tulip of yellow and red, buy Kaizerskroon, and for a magnificent flower distinct from any other color, grow a few Proserpine, very early, carmine rose in color. The queen of all double tulips for either cutting or pans, particularly for Easter is Murillo, which is white when first expanded and then turning to a soft satiny pink. Another useful double tulip is Tournesol, red and yellow, and that's about all the tulips you want to bother with.

Seldom does the commercial florist grow anything but single Dutch hyacinths. They make a larger spike than the double varieties, and here again a limited number of varieties is all that's necessary. Here are a dozen that will fill the bill; Red and pink—Gertrude, gigantea, Moreno, Norma. White—Baron Von Thuyll, La Grandesse, L'Innocence, Mme. Van der Hoop. Blue, light and dark—Charles Dickens, Czar Peter, King of the Blues, Regulus.

In narcissi, the double Von Sion is always popular and so is the Trumpet Major. Three other single narcissi that force well and sold well the last few years are Emperor, Empress and Golden Spur. The French-grown Trumpet Major can be forced easily for Christmas. It is not as fine as the Holland-grown, but its earliness makes it valuable.

PLANTS FOR CEMETERY USE.

What plants and shrubs are used for cemetery planting? I have calls for "something to plant at the cemetery" and would be glad to know what would be most suitable for that purpose; also what hardy shrubs should be planted on school grounds to give blooms as much as possible through the year.

What would be a reasonable charge for seeding or sodding lots at the cemetery? I have inquiries and hardly know what would be considered a fair price per square rod or yard. L. R. A.

To take up the cemetery question first, a definite answer cannot be given unless we know under what rules your cemetery is governed, and these rules vary greatly in different cities and communities. In small, rural cemeteries, the lot owner is usually allowed to plant whatever he sees fit. One lot will have a small cluster of geraniums, another will have at the foot of a grave a Mme. Plantier rose, another a root of peony, and still another a Swedish juniper; each one, doubtless, thinks his lot most tastefully adorned, but the general effect is poor indeed.

Again, in some of the great cemeteries of our eastern cities, where the lot owner is also allowed to embellish his plot of ground any way he chooses, you will see a most extravagant display of flower gardening, elaborate designs of carpet bedding, as well as beds of geraniums, coleus and all our other common bedding plants, and they are often preceded in early spring with gay and costly displays of tulips, hyacinths and other bulbous flowers. We have seen cemeteries in the vicinity of New York and Boston that we considered vastly overdone, and in this respect they had long passed the point of beauty and good taste. Still, if I happened to be a florist near one of these cemeteries and my living largely depended on this cemetery trade, it is not likely I should tell my patrons that they were overdoing it.

There is another order of cemeteries, mostly associations of lot owners and governed by a board of trustees. The superintendent is, or should be, a man of taste with a knowledge and practice of landscape art and planting. He plants a group of hardy shrubs in appropriate spots, an elm or an oak or maple here or there, where it is needed, a cluster or bell of evergreens, Norway spruce, Austrian pine or Picea pungens, where a dense background is most suitable.

In many of our eastern cemeteries, land has been acquired that was naturally very undulating in surface and the large native trees left standing have been of the greatest service in landscape effects.

In the cemetery that I am best acquainted with, and which I have yet failed to see equaled for real beauty, rest and peacefulness to the eye and senses, the lot owner has only the right to erect a monument and place an iron or stone vase or wire or rustic basket on his lot. The cemetery authorities do all the rest and the consequence is that if the monuments and vases were removed it would be a well laid out, well planted and well maintained park.

Now, if the inquirer is doing business with one of those cemeteries which allows the lot owner to plant what he chooses, then any of the ordinary summer flowering plants can be used, just as we use them in flower gardening, except that any tall growing things like dahlias or hollyhocks should be avoided, or plants that come late into flower, such as salvias. Neatness, compactness and an early and continuous attractiveness are the qualities desired in such a place. If you are asked to plant hardy shrubs and the ericaceous plants do well in your climate, then there is nothing more beautiful than the rhododendrons, hardy azaleas and kalmias. As for the lovely hardy deciduous shrubs, the list is so long that it would be out of place to begin to enumerate any of them. Take the catalogue of any reputable northern nurseryman and his long list of hardy shrubs can be depended upon to be hardy and all are fine.

Yet, here again, as with the flowering plants, if just one shrub is desired for a small lot, say, two or three hundred square feet, they should be of short growing tendency, such as Spiraea Van Houttei rather than the strong growing philadelphus or the golden elder.

The writer is glad to hear of shrubbery in school grounds, for our grammar schools are too often surrounded with a dismal waste of gravel. I may say the same about shrubs for the school grounds that I said for the cemetery. The variety is great and all are desirable. Here is a short list that will cover all the summer months, and I put them somewhat as they will flower. Beginning in May with the cydonia (Japan quince) and the forsythias, then follows Spiraea prunifolia, the lilacs, viburnum, then Spiraea Van Houttei, S. Anthony Waterer, S. bumalda, and other species of these shrubs, Deutzia gracilis and crenata, corchorus, calycanthus, exocordia, philadelphus and Tartarian honeysuckle. It's true that most of the hardy shrubs flower in May and June when their flowers and foliage are most welcome after the awakening from our hibernating winter, but in August we have the glorious Hydrangea paniculata and the altheas in many shades. The above are all well known, but there are many more lovely shrubs, and don't forget those with inconspicuous flowers but attractive foliage or fruit, such as the golden elder, Prunus Pasardi, the purple berbery, African tamarix, and above all the indispensable Berberis Thunbergii, beautiful in every spot you plant it the year through.

If little grading is needed or very little good soil is to be supplied, then 25 cents per square yard is a fair price for sodding, and if the same conditions exist, 15 cents per square yard for seeding. We think, however, these prices could vary some both ways, according to size of job. It is certainly worth more for either sodding or seeding to fuss over a little lot of ten yards than one of 100 yards. WILLIAM SCOTT.

ST. LOUIS.

Club Meeting.

At the August meeting of the Florists' Club held on the 11th, forty-two members and all the officers were present. After reading of the minutes, the different committees reported that everything was in readiness for the S. A. F. convention and everybody working hard to make it a great success.

Seven applications were presented as follows: Geo. Ducker, P. J. Cahill, Geo. Wagoner, C. De Weaver, Robt. Wolfsberger, Robt. Thomson and G. A. Casey. These were elected to membership by a full vote.

After reading several important communications, the election of officers took place which resulted as follows: For president there were two candidates, Otto G. Koenig and Chas. A. Juengel. After counting the ballots, the tellers announced that Mr. Juengel had been elected by a majority of thirteen votes. For vice-president there were three candidates, Carl Beyer, Henry C. Ostertag and W. J. Pilcher. Mr. Pilcher won out on the first ballot. For secretary, Mr. Schray had no opposition and was elected by unanimous vote. For treasurer, Fred Meinhardt and J. W. Dunford were the candidates. Mr. Meinhardt was elected on the first ballot.

For three trustees there were six candidates, F. C. Weber, Theo. Miller and E. W. Guy were the lucky three to be elected. The above elected officers are a set of hustlers and will, no doubt, keep up the good standing of the club.

Various Notes.

Fred L. Schulz, son of Jacob Schulz, of Louisville, Ky., is in town and will stay until after the convention.

Mr. Reed, of Reed & Keller, New York, in company with Mr. Barnett, are here working on their large exhibits in the display hall.

Leo Ostermier, of Siebrecht & Son, New York, is also busy in the display hall, staging plants.

Martin Reukauf and Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, are working hard at the convention hall.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., of Philadelphia, is busy displaying goods.

L. Baumann, of Chicago, is also making a great show of florists' supplies.

Arnold Ringier is here in advance making the rounds of the trade and reports that his firm, W. W. Barnard & Co., of Chicago, are having a big trade in supplies, seeds and bulbs.

Hon. Cyrus P. Walbridge, president of the Business Men's League, will deliver the address of welcome at the opening meeting of the S. A. F. in place of Mayor Wells, who is out of town. Mr. Walbridge delivered the address of welcome eleven years ago, when the society met here.

Wm. P. Craig is in town and will have charge of Jos. Heacock's display at the convention. Other exhibitions are arriving by every train. J. J. B.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The supply of fine flowers seems hardly equal to the demand, light and unsteady though it is. Beauties, valley, asters and carnations are all good sellers when of fair quality. Some very nice orders for these flowers have been shipped to distant outside cities lately. Sweet peas are still coming into town in fair condition, thanks to late planting, care, and a cool summer. Dahlias are arriving in quantity, the pompons being very nearly in their true form. Japanese hydrangeas are also getting plentiful and will figure in a certain class of designs and in decorations for the next couple of months, weather permitting.

The Flower Market.

President Wm. K. Harris called a special meeting of the stockholders of the Flower Market to order at 2 p. m. last Friday. He stated that the object of the meeting was to decide: First, whether the present quarters at 1228 Cherry street should be given up, which the board of directors recommended; and, second, whether the Market should continue in business.

Secretary Alfred Burton read the report showing a deficit for the first fiscal year, Nov. 1, 1902, to Oct. 31, 1903, and a profit of about $300 in the nine months ending July 30, 1904.

It was stated that a tenant had been found who would take the lease of the present quarters from Sept. 1. This lease expires June 30, 1906. It was agreed on motion of Joseph Heacock that this offer be accepted. The question of continuing or abandoning the enterprise came next.

It was stated that the Market was not supported by enough growers to make it profitable to the stockholders without doing a commission business as well. Walter P. Stokes asked whether the manager thought the business could be made profitable in time. Charles E. Meehan replied that the feeling in the past had been that the Market should be developed as a market and not as a commission house, but that if the commission business were pushed and stalls rented to the growers who wished them, he believed that in three or four years the business could be made profitable and a good market could be established.

John Burton asked the privilege of being allowed an opportunity to rent a stall in the Market. Joseph Heacock thought that as the growers had not cordially supported the undertaking it would be better to give it up. A. Farenwald said the Market had not paid him. C. E. Meehan replied that his stock had only been sent to the Market during the glut. H. H. Battles favored continuing the Market, but thought the manager should be given more power. Joseph Heacock replied that the board of directors had given the manager full power.

John Burton moved that the Market be continued under the present management. This motion was twice seconded. After further discussion it was adopted by a viva voce vote. The meeting then adjourned. About 500 of the 674 shares were represented.

The board of directors met after the stockholders adjourned. They instructed the managers to rent the first floor and basement of 1235 and 1237 Filbert street. This has been done. The Market will be moved in September to its new quarters, which are more accessible and more central than the old quarters.

Our St Louis Delegation.

Broad street station was the scene of farewells a little after 8 o'clock last Sunday evening when a good sized party of Philadelphia florists left to attend the convention and to see the Pike. There was lots to do in helping Commissary General Westcott get his stores aboard, then much sound advice was given the bowlers, by which they cannot fail to benefit, and finally leave-takings.

The members of the party were: John Burton, Miss Burton, F. J. Michell, F. J. Michell, Jr., Antoine Wintzer, John F. Sibson, Mrs. Sioson, Julius Wolff, Jr., Mrs. Wolff, S. Adelberger, Edwin Lonsdale, Leo Niessen, Robert Craig, George Craig, Robert Kift, J. H. Ribsam, A. Lake, Charles Sim, Mrs. Sim, John Westcott, A. H. Lanser, Wm. Robertson, J. L. Dillon and son, D. T. Connor, W. F. Gibson, John Conley, Fred Ehret, Chas. D. Ball and W. H. Taplin.

The Florists' Club.

A special meeting of the Florists' Club was called last Friday evening at the request of five members, who wanted arrangements for the club's bowling team at St. Louis definitely settled. After a lively debate the plan mapped out at the August meeting was carried out. Let us hope our team wins a great victory at St. Louis, but whatever the result, we know that every bowler will do his very best.

Various Notes.

H. Bayersdorfer, in speaking of his trip to Europe this summer, said that never in twenty years had he experienced such torrid heat. Paris was simply unbearable. His visit there had to be cut short.

C. J. Watson reports that his firm, S. S. Pennock, has had some good shipping orders for Beauties and valley.

The dahlia business at Atco, heretofore carried on under the name of W. P. Peacock, will in future be conducted under the name of L. K. Peacock, under whose management it has been developed.

M. Rice & Co. have built a gallery over their office to give more desk room. They have rented two floors in nearby buildings for purposes of storage.

Larry Sutter, of Quarryville, Pa., says he would not be without the Review. It reaches him almost as soon as it reaches Philadelphia.

Wm. J. Baker is receiving fine yellow daisies from A. & G. Rosbach, of Pemberton, N. J.

Paul Richter, of H. F. Michell Co., is too busy a man for even Saturday half-holidays. He occasionally makes for the shore for a Sunday dip, which he enjoys.

Chas. F. Edgar is spending a few days in Lancaster and Chester counties.

J. P. Habermehl and Wm. Westcott have done a little quiet shooting on the Gun Club's grounds at Wissinoming.

R. M. Eisenhart has been spending a few days at Atlantic City. He has found the present season very favorable for outdoor violet culture.

It is sometimes pretty hard for a business man to get away, but Edward Reid's experience of going to his berth well down the bay and waking up back at the wharf again is rather unusual. He did finally get off for Savannah.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The demand is nothing remarkable, but it would consume more roses and carnations if they were available. There are considerable quantities of Beauties from young stock which are fine for the season and they all find a sale. Tea roses are scarce and the shipping stock brings good summer prices; so do low grades, for that matter, considering quality. The supply of field-grown carnations is increasing and quality is fair. Asters are still abundant, but are not so plentiful as they were, for disease is playing havoc in many places. The predominant flowers just now are gladioli and rudbeckias. Dahlias are beginning to come in.

Various Notes.

These are the dog days, but Bassett & Washburn say that it was 46 at Hinsdale one night last week and they have had steam on in the greenhouses many nights this month.

John Van der Wal has rented J. Schau's place at One Hundred and Fourth street and Michigan avenue and will grow cut flowers and bedding plants.

C. B. Chase has been fishing at Fox Lake and the other day pulled out, on his hooks, a tattered pocketbook in which were $10, railroad tickets, etc.

At its city place the George Wittbold Co. has planted one house to mums to be succeeded by lilies and another to carnations to be succeeded by bedding stock.

Kennicott Bros. Co. is taking advantage of the quiet week locally because of the convention to put the store to rights again, redecorating throughout.

John Zeck, of Amling's, is on vacation this week.

The St. Louis Trip.

There were considerably over 100 in the party which left Chicago for the convention Monday morning, but the failure of many to notify the transportation committee that they were going, necessitated traveling on the regular train instead of a special, as would otherwise have been the case. But everyone was taken care of comfortably. There were plenty of refreshments in the club's canteen if not on the diner. The following were in the party:

Geo. Asmus, P. J. Hauswirth, J. B. Deamud, F. W. Martin, Lester Partridge, Chas. Balluff, J. C. Vaughan, Adam Zender, P. J. Foley, John Degnan, L. H. Winterson, L. Coatsworth, J. S. Wilson, August Poehlmann, John Poehlmann, Adolph Poehlmann, A. Jurgens, E. C. Amling, W. N. Rudd, Peter Reinberg, W. J. Smyth, Henry Smyth, C. W. Scott, C. W. McKellar, W. L. Palinsky, Geo. M. Garland, H. N. Bruns, G. L. Grant and H. B. Howard, Chicago; J. A. Bissinger, Lansing, Mich.; A. M. York, Hancock, Mich.; W. B. Perry, Cresco, Ia.; W. T. Symonds, Decorah, Ia.; H. Dalwig, Max Schwebke, Wm. Edlefsen, W. A. Kennedy, F. H. Holton and J. E. Pollworth, Milwaukee; G. N. Mouzin, Lake Geneva; R. Vincent, Jr., and T. A. Vincent, White Marsh, Md.; E. Orans, Joliet; E. N. Kring, Fairbury, Ill.; A. F. Longren, Lockport, Ill.; Mrs. A. Guillaume and daughter, La Crosse, and others. Many of the gentlemen were accompanied by their wives and other members of their families, the number of ladies being larger than ever before participated in a club excursion. Several Chicago people had gone ahead and others followed on later trains, so that Chicago's representation is a good one.

NEW YORK.

Various Notes.

Mr. Neubrand, of the F. R. Pierson Company, has returned from a three weeks' vacation at Rochester, N. Y., where he reveled in nursery visitations.

Much to his regret, Mr. Pierson fears business engagements will make it impossible for him to attend the St. Louis convention. He will be ably represented there, however, by Mr. Fotheringham and the new fern "Tarrytown" will be very much in evidence. It certainly is a most beautiful novelty.

Elliott's French importations of Roman hyacinths, paper whites and Lilium candidum have arrived per steamer Roma, and are rapidly being disseminated.

C. A. B. Frith, of Bermuda, sailed for the Island Saturday last after a brief visit of a week in New York City.

The gladiolus exhibit made this week by John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, at the Eden Musee, New York City, is worthy of the firm and drawing crowds. Some very fine samples of the best varieties were received at our New York office on Friday last.

P. T. DeVoy, of Thos. DeVoy & Son, Poughkeepsie, was in the city last week with sample flowers of their grand new geranium, "Telegraph," a rich, deep, orange-cerise in color, that is already in great demand, of which Mr. DeVoy tells me many thousands have been ordered for October delivery.

Henry Siebrecht, Sr., owing to pressing engagements, finds it impossible to be at the St. Louis convention as arranged, although he has sent the usual exhibit and will visit the fair with his family later in the season.

Fine stock of the Chatenay rose is being handled these days by Bonnot Bros., of the Coogan Building. Will Siebrecht's valley is always in demand and supply there every day in the year.

Mr. Saltford returned from his month's outing with his family on Monday.

The New Jersey Floricultural will celebrate its tenth anniversary with a tin wedding demonstration the first Monday in October. Joe Manda is booming it.

The auction season begins early in September. Mr. Elliott's voice seems especially mellifluous this summer, since he left the ranks of the bachelors.

Mr. Cleary will conduct the services at the sale of nursery stock next month for Chas. Bird, of Arlington, N. J.

Michael Ford, of Ford Bros., will complete his summer recreations at Atlantic City next week.

The death is announced of one of the pioneers of the trade, Mr. Joseph Gard, of Hicksville, N. Y., where he has lived since his retirement some five years ago. He was connected with Messrs. Dailledouse and Zeller in business, the establishment of the partnership dating back to the forties. His age was seventy-six. He was much esteemed by those who knew him best and his career is a credit to horticulture.

H. H. Berger & Co.'s new catalogue is handsome and creditable and the firm's business has been advancing steadily during the past year. Mrs. Berger regrets that the press of business prevents her meeting her many friends at the convention as contemplated.

Henry Beaulieu, the pansy and onion specialist, of Woodhaven, is adding to his real estate and so increasing his facilities in keeping with his growing business.

G. J. Snyder, the Ridgewood, N. J., florist, met with a severe loss last week in the destruction of his greenhouses by a miniature tornado that left the houses a total wreck.

The market remains "unmentionable." The possibility of a change for the better before September seems out of the question. Outdoor stock is very abundant, much of it showing the effects of the excessive rains. Gladioli, rudbeckia and asters seem limitless and at times there is no bottom to their values. In large lots gladioli have touched $2.50 per 1,000. Next come the dahlias. The grower whose shipments to New York are enormous has over 100 acres to draw from this season. Peacock, of Atco, is certainly the dahlia king of the east.

All the retail windows are golden with the glow of rudbeckia. Hydrangea paniculata is abundant. Orchids alone maintain their real values and the supply never is in excess of requirements. Jas. McManus is never without a good assortment, his many sources of supply and the large shipments of Lager & Hurrell especially ensuring satisfactory response to calls which now come from many of the large cities of the country.

Water lilies still arrive daily from Lecakes' Connecticut farm.

Jos. Fenrich has returned from his outing in the Catskills, ready for strenuous effort and very hopeful as to the future.

Chas. Millang's new arrangement for special exhibits is none too large for the flood of gladioli daily, and the lilies are as much in evidence there as usual.

Walter Sheridan was greatly missed in the happy party that journeyed to St. Louis, and John B. Nugent was constantly in possession of inspiring thought waves from the well satisfied travelers, because of the excellent and unfailing supply of good things with which he had stocked the commissariat. A letter of appreciation was signed by all and forwarded Mr. Nugent from Harper's Ferry, but the supply was not exhaustible until the towers of the castle of Anheuser-Busch flashed upon the vision of the weary travelers.

The trip to the fair city was delightful every hour of the thirty-two. The Baltimore & Ohio proved itself a worthy choice of Messrs. O'Mara, Guttman and Bunyard, the committee appointed by the New York club to assure the comfort of its members.

Baltimore sent its faithful ahead, but loyal Gude and his lieutenants were in waiting to welcome and accompany us.

Robt. Kift and Dennis Connor were a committee of two at Philadelphia to speed us on our way, and Gillett, Critchell and Rodgers, of Cincinnati, were at the station, the vanguard of forty.

In the New York party were: P. J. Fay, head gardener for Dr. Webb, of Shelburne, Vt.; Frank Hamilton, head gardener of the Borough of the Bronx, who has thirty-eight parks and 4,076 acres in his jurisdiction; Geo. A. Skene, head gardener of the New York Botanical Society; Alf. Langjahr, the wholesaler of Twenty-eighth street, and Mrs. Langjahr; P. L. Powell, gardener for Samuel Thorne, and Mrs. Powell and son, of Millbrook, N. Y.; John Wilson, of Short Hills, N. J.; Robert Wilson, Brooklyn, N. Y.; R. W. Dreen, of Providence, R. I.; Louis DuPuy, Whitestone, L. I.; Jos. Manda, Orange, N. J.; Charles Lenker, Freeport, N. Y.; Patrick O'Mara, of New Jersey; John Scott and Alex. Hampton, Brooklyn, and the press men, Alex. Wallace, H. A. Goldbeyer, H. Pepper and Austin Shaw.

The train arrived at St. Louis at 6 p. m., exactly on time, and we were welcomed by a large delegation of St. Louis florists, who gave us a royal welcome. A glance at the exposition hall revealed a busy crowd under direction of Vice-President Beneke, with almost everything in readiness for the opening on Tuesday.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

There was an improvement in business last week, and all good stock cleaned up nicely, but no change in prices.

The death of a well-known councilman made a boom for several of the stores, as there were orders for thirty or forty large designs, ranging from $8.00 to $50.00 apiece.

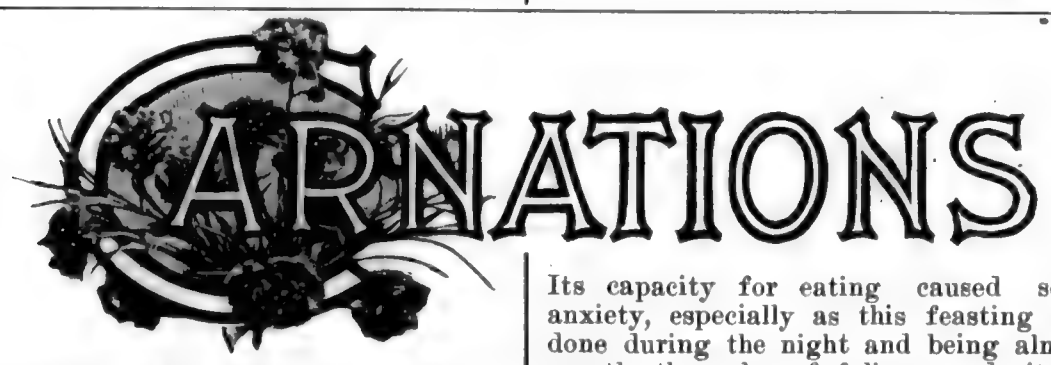
Various Notes.

My prediction as to the number who would go to St. Louis did not work out; however, among those who did go were Wm. Falconer and daughter, Alex Nelson, and about fifteen others whose names I did not get.

Karl Klinke, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Company, has gone to Muncie, Ind., but will visit St. Louis this week. When he gets back he will tell it to you in Dutch ("as it should be spoke").

T. P. Langhans, secretary of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Company, has returned from his fishing trip to Canada, looking brown and fat. We have always believed him to be a consistent member of the church to which he belongs, but a man who won't talk about anything smaller than three to five pound black bass and eight to twenty-two pound muskalonge—well, we have our doubts, and out of charity will ask his friends to steer clear of the subject of fish when they meet him.

A. W. Smith, Jr., and wife have gone to their cottage at Chautauqua for the remainder of the summer.



William Loew, known to the trade generally as Billy Flowers, will be missed from the convention for the first time in many years. Billy is too busy arranging for his green goods business to go any place.

Joe Byerly, of Randolph & McClements, is doing Atlantic City.

E. C. Ludwig is getting his new store on East Diamond street ready for a late summer opening, and it is going to be of the finest. Ernest never does anything by halves.

John Bader and daughter will leave Wednesday, August 24, for a trip to San Francisco, Cal., with the Knights Templar. This will be a thirty-five day trip, traveling in their own train there and back without change of cars. John is always next to all the good things.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Insects.

Preparations should at once be made to guard against the ravages of insect pests. They will certainly put in an appearance sooner or later, more likely sooner than later.

The old saying, "Nothing is sure but death and taxes," should be amended to include plant lice. It is poor economy to wait until the plants are badly infested, when so many means of prevention are at hand, and prevention is the best plan to follow, as the punctures made by insects not only weaken the plant, but open the way for fungous disease germs to enter; then, too, it is humiliating, when showing a fellow grower over your place, to hear remarks about the live stock needing attention. These remarks perhaps may not be audible, but might be said to be almost discernible.

The most prevalent pests and at the same time the easiest to prevent or destroy are the aphides.

Light fumigation weekly with powdered tobacco—the fumigating kind—gives them no chance to obtain a foothold. Thrips are sometimes brought in from the field when housing the plants, and their presence is not detected at once, but as soon as signs of their work is seen, thorough fumigation with cayenne pepper should be resorted to.

I gave full directions last year for using this remedy to be effective, but will repeat my caution against using an adulterated article, as this is one of the main reasons of failure.

Red spider once established is a hard customer to handle, but a sharp lookout must be kept for its first appearance. It can then be readily kept from spreading by repeated syringing and in the end conquered. I know of no preparation that will act as a preventive.

It is said, however, that some of the concentrated extracts of tobacco will kill them and perhaps can be employed in some manner as a preventive.

The carnation beetle referred to by Mr. Scott has never troubled us, but having had considerable experience with Slug Shot, I am confident it will destroy them. Nearly every year we hear of a new pest to be added to the list of carnation enemies.

Last season soon after housing we were troubled with a green worm similar in appearance to a cabbage worm, but different in many ways and new to me. Its capacity for eating caused some anxiety, especially as this feasting was done during the night and being almost exactly the color of foliage made it extremely difficult to catch.

Several were captured and fed until they passed into the chrysalis state. These were kept and this spring hatched out a dark brown moth. I am not up on moths, but from close observation am satisfied it is the genuine fly-by-night sort and the eggs deposited when plants are in the field. These worms were not very particular in their taste: any part of the plant lying in their path was cut off, stem, bud or tender shoot, but Slug Shot made short work of them. Paris green would probably kill them, but I am not an advocate of using this poison on any plant. Geo. S. Osborn.

RED SPIDER ON CARNATIONS.

We have seen quite a number of red spiders in our newly filled houses of carnations, brought in from field with the plants. Will you tell us the proper way to use hydrocyanic acid gas, or is there a better remedy? Too much water we don't think advisable yet. B. R.

I have never had any experience in the use of hydrocyanic acid gas and I hardly know what to say in regard to using it on your carnations before they have gotten into a vigorous growing condition. My impression, however, is that I would go a little slow in this matter. Unless you have had some experience with the stuff the danger of failure is too great to risk your whole crop right at the start.

That it is a great thing is generally conceded, and that it kills the spider without damaging the plants, too. As far as I know past experiments were made on plants which were in a growing condition. In your case, however, the plants are not in that condition, and it will be a couple or three weeks before you can say that they have really become established and are growing. I do not say that the gas would injure them, but I would not care to risk a full dose on them, and a half dose may not be strong enough to kill the spider.

You will find in the April 14 issue of the Review an article telling you how to figure the cubic contents of your houses and the proportion of a dose of the gas. If you do decide to try it on your plants we would very much like to hear with what degree of success. On account of its dangerousness in the hands of inexperienced persons it has not as yet become as common as many other less effective but less dangerous insecticides.

Personally I would prefer to syringe the plants with clear water at least the first ten days. If your plants are set firmly and the soil settled around them properly the plants will stand up under a good strong cutting spray. You should keep them sprayed a good deal, any way, so why not syringe them once or twice each day and destroy the spider at the same time.

Salt water and soap dissolved in water are both good, but you will find the Tobakine liquid better than either of the two. In a case like this it is not a question of which is the cheapest, but rather which is the safest and the most effective remedy. What do a few dollars amount to when it comes to saving your whole season's crop? A. F. J. Baur.

BOILER AND PIPING.

My houses are two in number, 16x75 feet each, eleven feet to the ridge, running east and west. The south side and both ends are glazed about one-fourth to one-third the depth of the wall; no glass on the north side; walls built of sheathing and weather-boarding, with building paper between. Our average winter weather is about freezing, though the mercury often goes below. We have had zero weather once in the past twenty-five years, though it is safe to say that we rarely have over fifteen degrees of frost. I have not bought a boiler, as I have not decided what kind to purchase. I should like a boiler with capacity for one or two more houses than I now have. Is there a boiler on the market that can be depended on to keep a steady heat for six or eight hours at night in normal weather. My plant is not large enough to justify a night man. I have heard of magazine boilers. Can they be successfully fired with bituminous coal of nut size? Anthracite would be too expensive.

How low is it necessary to set a boiler in the ground? The man that I have engaged to pipe the houses says he does not see any necessity for placing boiler more than three feet below the floor of the greenhouses. Of course, this would be more convenient to remove the ashes and take in fuel, if it would not interfere with the circulation. I shall use hot water. I have some 2½ and 3-inch pipe and will purchase some 1½ and 2-inch for returns. Please advise best method of laying same. South house for carnations, two-thirds of north house for teas and remaining third for palms, ferns, Asparagus plumosus, swainsona and such. I have a partition in north house. The narrow benches in the north house will be used for lilies and miscellaneous stock.

Would it be feasible to build a frame on the south side of the carnation house and rip off the weather-boarding between the frame and house. I could grow quite a good deal of stuff in such a frame, and I don't think it would steal much heat from the house. However, when the sash on the frame were open a strong draught into the house would doubtless be created. Would that be bad for carnations if it passed by the pipes and circulated under the benches? I want the boiler and packing shed at the west end and would like to build them with a driveway left between the sheds and the west end of the house. Would this not be more safe and at the same time sufficiently convenient? How would this work if I added to my range? I have space to build on both sides of the houses and hope to do so in the near future. Would it be essential in this climate to have potting shed joined to greenhouse?

S. B. S.

If in the house you wish to use for carnations you were to carry a 2½-inch pipe to the far end of the house, either under the ridge or under the most protected or inside bench and at the far end break it up to return through six 2-inch pipes, it will give you ample heat for your carnation house.

In regard to heating the frame you propose along the south side of the house, I am inclined to think it will be more satisfactory to run a loop of 2-inch pipe along the front of the frame, rather than to attempt to heat it indirectly from the carnation house. The house to carry roses and palms may be piped in the same manner, but it will require a little more radiation. A 2½- or 3-inch supply pipe can be used to supply eight 2-inch pipes returning under the more exposed benches.

In regard to the location of the boiler, the closer it can be placed to the point where the heat is desired the more economical will it be in fuel. The longer the distance the water is forced to travel the less efficient it becomes. Short circuits, which return the water quickly at a high temperature, are most economical. While a driveway can be maintained between the boiler pit and greenhouses it is not to be recommended, as with ordinary care in firing and good construction there is little danger from fire. A boiler built on the return tubular plan with an ample fire place and a large capacity of water—i. e., containing a large quantity of water—will undoubtedly serve your purpose best. A boiler with a capacity of 1,000 feet will care for your present structures but, if future needs are to be considered, add 500 feet to the capacity of the boiler for each additional house of like dimensions of those you now have.

The main thing with a plant such as you have is to secure good height for the expansion tank, which should be connected to the return pipe close to the boiler and located fifteen to eighteen feet above that point, if practicable. If the dome of the boiler is a few inches lower than the lowest point in the returns that will suffice. L. C. C.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

ALL hard-wooded trees require severe pruning when transplanted.

THE native magnolias should only be moved in spring and closely pruned.

THE western wholesale growers are steadily increasing their outputs of apple grafts.

THERE is steadily increasing demand for hardy flowering shrubs and for hardy perennials.

THE birches are suitable for high, dry or stony situations. Early fall is a good season to plant them.

IF cherry trees are transplanted in the fall, do it early, to give time to become established before cold weather.

THE white oak requires somewhat less severe pruning than other members of the family which are to be moved.

NURSERYMEN are coming to the conclusion that expositions are not what they have been "cracked up to be" as business getters.

C. W. CARMAN is visiting various cities in Iowa and it is reported that he is contemplating the removal of his extensive nursery business from Lawrence, Kans.

THE Carolina poplar is largely planted in laying out new additions to our cities, because of its quick growth, but in the end the American elm or pin oak would generally give better satisfaction.

THE man with a hundred agents out envies the fellow who gets his business with a catalogue and a couple of dozen stenographers, but the other one says he's only working for the government.

C. W. WARD sails August 18 to visit European peony growers and nursery centers.

B. E. GAGE, of the Peterson Nursery, Chicago, has been visiting nurseries in the west and north.

THE George M. Bacon Pecan Co., De Witt, Ga., has a new chestnut of unusual size and ripening by August 1.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—The foundation for the new office of the Augustine Nursery, which is to be erected on the company's packing grounds, near the depot, was commenced yesterday, and the building will be pushed to completion as soon as possible.

APPLE AND PEAR SEEDS.

I have some good apple and pear fruits from which I would like to save the seed. Kindly let me know how to take care of the fruits in order to ripen the seed and insure germination?

G. A. D.

When the fruit is ripe, the seed is mature. Keep it in the fruit as long as possible. Save the seed and keep it as any other seed. Sow in spring and ninety-five per cent will germinate. This seed, in most cases, will bring only a small percentage of good fruit. It will pay better to buy of some reliable nurserymen trees of these or other well known varieties. R. V.

THE PECAN.

A few years ago the pecan was a small nut with a great deal of bitter, astringent inner bark and great care must necessarily be exercised to obtain the small kernel free from it so that it would be palatable. The kernel was so good, however, that the attention of expert nurserymen was called to it and a system of selection and propagation was begun to enlarge the meat and if possible to make the thick, hard shell thinner and more delicate. Years have been spent at this work, but with the finest results. The thick shell has become so thin it may with propriety be called a "paper shell." The small meat has become so large that a few nuts now weight a pound. The bitter and astringent inner lining has been almost entirely disposed of and the meat parts from the shell easily and completely separated.

I ALWAYS look forward with pleasure to the REVIEW's weekly visit.—J. B. STEPHENS, Toronto, Ont.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

LEONARD SEED CO. has remodeled and improved its onion set warehouse at Jefferson Park, Ill.

THE ONION set harvest at Chicago is backward, more than half the acreage being yet untouched.

A TRUCK-GROWERS' association has been organized at Mineral Wells, Tex., with S. A. Baxter secretary.

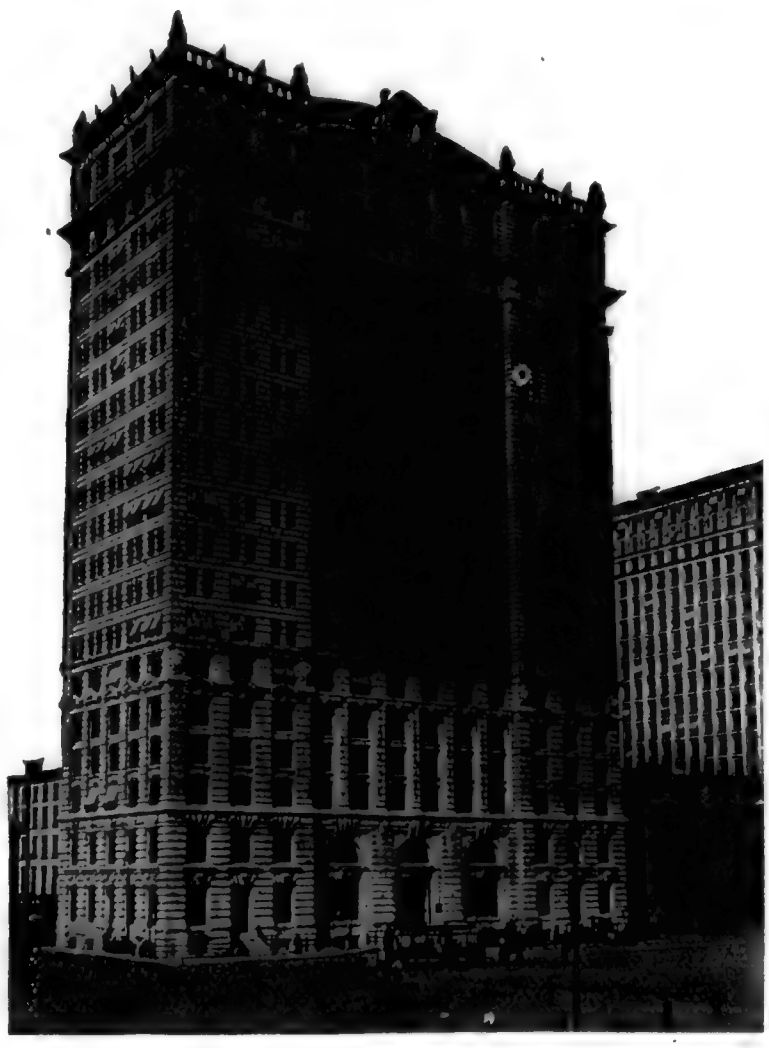
THE ONION set grower finds that this is one of the years when thinner seeding might have been an advantage.

THE PERENNIAL top onion is at present bringing $2 per bushel; a higher price than has been realized for several years.

COMPLAINT IS being made that much of the pickling cucumber seed planted the past spring fails to make a uniform pickle.

WHEN a reliable assistant is needed by a seedsman the cost of securing one should be of secondary importance. This will apply to either a book or a man.

DES MOINES, IOWA.—The Hawkeye Seed Co., on Aug. 17, made an assignment of its business to A. A. Berry, of Clarinda, who represents a large Iowa seed company. The assignment papers were signed by the president, C. B. Burkhart, who stated that it was impossible to attach a list of the assets and liabilities of the company. The Hawkeye Seed Co. was located at 210 Seventh street, and is the company which, two or three years ago, purchased the business of Josiah Livingston, who had conducted the business for about ten years previous.



VILMORIN MEMORIAL.

The American members of the committee appointed to raise funds for the Vilmorin Memorial to be erected at Paris are D. M. Ferry, Detroit; C. S. Sargent, Boston, and Wm. McMurtrie, New York. Mr. Ferry sends the seed trade a circular letter explaining that the aim is to make the subscription a popular one, the subscriptions so far received in France averaging a little less than $7 each. Mr. Ferry encloses a translation of a circular of the French committee, from which we take the following extract:

The eminent services rendered to agriculture and horticulture by Henry de Vilmorin are well known. In fact, during four generations the heads of the Vilmorin family: Philippe Victoire, his son Phillipe Andre, then his grandson Louis and lastly his great-grandson Henry, have successively associated the name Vilmorin with the progress achieved in agriculture and horticulture since 150 years. Without the Vilmorins there would perhaps be a little less grain in our fields, but without doubt less sugar in our beets, and certainly less flowers in our gardens. It is this long and immense work, accomplished by the Vilmorins, which we propose to honor.

Mr. Ferry adds that he is in full sympathy with this movement and will acknowledge receipt of subscriptions and see that they are forwarded to the treasurer of the general fund at Paris.

WE ARE much pleased with the Florists' Manual, and could not get along without the FLORISTS' REVIEW. Enclosed find another dollar.—WM. RHODES & SON, Leechburg, Pa.

DUTCH SEED CROP REPORT.

Sluis & Groot, Enkhuizen, Holland, send the following seed crop report for the end of July:

On account of the very wet weather which prevailed last autumn, some biennials were sown very late and in some parts they could not be sown at all. Consequently the area of beets, mangels, turnips, parsley, corn salad, etc., is not so large as was first proposed. Our mild winter did not kill any plants. In spring we had excellent weather, so that field work, sowing and planting could take place under most favorable circumstances. This fine weather has lasted up to the present time, so that as a whole the prospects of the crop are good.

Cauliflower looks good and promises a good crop. White cabbage, red cabbage, savoy, Brussels sprouts and Borecole have developed very well, look healthy and promise a good crop. Turnip and swedes, owing to the unfavorable weather in autumn, part of these were sown too late or were not sown at all; a good deal, however, has developed very well and promises a good average crop, with the exception of some few varieties, such as Milan. Kohlrabi, a good deal got lost; small crop. Mangel-wurzel and sugar beet look good. Beet stands pretty well. Carrots partly poor stand; as a whole they promise a fairly good crop. Parsnip and scorzonera are good crop. Corn salad is middling; some sowings have gone lost. Radish looks good. Spanish radish was little planted, as some sowings got lost last autumn; looks good. Onion is mediocre; the bulbs were not healthy. Garlic is good. Celeriac is sick; small crop. Plain parsley good; rooted parsley middling. Borage is a very good crop. Chervil and spinach promise an average crop. Peas are very good. cucumbers mediocre. Dwarf and runner beans are good as a whole; some plains are a poor stand on account of weak germination; hard winds have also done some damage.

After two years which were most unfavorable for flower seed growing, we are now glad to say that, owing to the fine weather in spring, the actual situation of crops as a whole is promising. Antirrhinum, calliopsis, campanula and centaurea are very good. Candytuft is good. Convolvulus was little sown; looks good. Dianthus, some plains a little thin; the plants which are left look promising. Gypsophila is a good crop and eschscholtzia very good. Helichrysum and lobelia make good standing. Mimulus is very good. Mignonette was little sown; looks promising. Myosotis is excellent and nasturtium very good. Nemophila, papaver, petunia and phlox are all good, rhodanthe very good. stocks, Virginian, excellent. Sweet peas, little sown; stand well. Ten-week stocks look splendid. Verbena is good, viola fairly good and wallflower very good.

PRICES OF MATERIAL.

The price of glass has been advanced but quotations are not stiffly held. There is a scarcity of 16x20, which is a popular greenhouse size, but certain jobbers have large stocks of 16x24, several large anticipated orders having failed to develop, and on this size there is a tendency to "let no guilty man escape" when he comes into the market.

Lumber is weaker, particularly cypress. Much good cypress has gone into railroad cars, and this summer car builders are not busy, with the result that the cypress mills are looking for orders.

Steam coal is off, particularly at Chicago, where the stock yards strike has had an appreciable effect.

WHITE PANDANUS.

Will you kindly let me know if the white from a Pandanus Veitchii is a disease and what to do to prevent them from turning white? F. S.

The variegation of plants is looked upon by many botanists as a diseased condition, from the fact that it arises from the suppression of the green coloring matter, or chlorophyll, in a portion of the foliage and stem of the plant, and this view seems to be sustained in a majority of instances by the greater tenderness and lessened vitality of a variegated plant as compared with the ordinary type of the same species.

The only way to avoid having albino plants among Pandanus Veitchii is by careful selection of the cuttings, it being very seldom that one of those all white plants will grow out of that condition and become properly variegated. It pays better to throw away those white cuttings than to propagate them and thus to depreciate the stock. W. H. TAPLIN.

FUTURE OF THE MUSKMELON.

During the last three or four years the growing of muskmelons in the eastern states has been far from satisfactory on account of their being attacked by a very obstinate fungous disease commonly known as blight. The grower used to think he had enough enemies to combat when he had to fight the several insect pests to which the plants are subject. For these some remedies were found whereby they could be kept in check, but for this latest trouble neither prevention nor cure has so far been found.

The disease strikes the plants almost in a night's time, beginning with small, yellowish spots which quickly spread until they cover the greater part of the leaf, which withers. The season at which the disease attacks the plants depends a good deal on the weather. Rather dry conditions and heavy night dews aid its progress. These night dews seem to supply just the amount of moisture required for the development of the spores, whereas rains are more apt to wash the spores from their resting places from the foliage. About the middle of August the disease usually strikes the plants, just about the time the first fruits are nearing maturity. The more advanced fruits can generally be harvested all right but the smaller, undeveloped ones are often rendered useless.

So far this disease has resisted all the ordinary remedies. Most fungous diseases will yield to Bordeaux mixture, but it seems to have very little effect on this. The first year it made its appearance the plants went so quickly that we had no chance to save them. The second year we thought to forestall it and the plants were thoroughly sprayed with Bordeaux early in August, but our hopes of warding it off were shattered, for the plants went just as they had done the season before. It is to be hoped that some effectual remedy may soon be found, but in the meantime the only hopes we have are in getting the plants started as early as possible, so that we can get the majority of the fruit fit for market before the disease makes its appearance. It is taking a good deal of risk to attempt to grow a late crop.

This year we are trying covering a few plants over night with cheesecloth to keep off the night dews and hope in this way to ward off the disease. Later on I will be able to report on the results, but even if this should prove successful the covering of a field of plants would entail a good deal of expense. So if we had to depend on the eastern states alone it looks as if the late crop, at least, would have to be grown under glass, as they do in some European countries, but thanks to the variance of our climate, there is little chance that there ever will come a time when muskmelons cannot be grown profitably in some sections of the country, and plentifully enough to supply all demands in the summer season, though the demand for variety may yet make it quite a profitable industry to grow them under glass for the winter and spring supply. W. S. Croydon.

DAMAGED GRAPES.

I send a few grapes to show you how they have been injured. If you know of any remedy, please let me know. Would spraying benefit them? M. F. T.

The grapes sent have been stung by some insect, probably the grape curculio. It is too late now to spray, as the fruit is too near the ripening stage to safely use poison. It is during the month of June and July that these insects work the harm by stinging the fruit. Only a small, round, black mark is visible when the berries are first stung, but this gradually increases in size until they assume the proportions as shown in the samples sent. Spraying has not been found very effective and the surest method of saving the fruit when this insect is troublesome is to encase the bunches in paper bags. This entails quite a little work, but it does not take so long as one would at first think. The bunches ripen well in the bags and come out so nice and clean that they always command the highest market price. In bagging, when done late, the bunches can be looked over and any damaged berries removed, but the work should be done early in June, before the insects have had a chance to do any damage. W. S. Croydon.

PERKASIE, PA.—There was a very severe wind storm here August 10, which demolished the greenhouse of J. H. Werst. The structure was 40x200 and seventeen feet to the ridge, used for forcing tomatoes. The proprietor is a hard-working man who stands high in the community. He has the sympathy of all his neighbors in the loss which he has sustained.

THE WEEKLY FLORISTS' REVIEW

"We have had very good returns from the advertisement in the Review and trust we shall be able to give you some more business in the future. For the present we are sold out of stock."

CATION GREENHOUSE CO.,
Per G. Klopfer.

Peoria, Ill., June 20, 1904.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We have hardly seen the sun during the past week and the prospects are for continued cool weather. I think, on the whole, that such a season favors both retailers and growers, as the quality of the stock seen the past few weeks has been superior to that we generally have during the month of August. Business is fair, considering the time of year, and flowers are being bought up in good shape. Roses are either very good or very poor. Many of the wholesalers are drying up their houses preparatory to getting ready for another season's business, and those that are not are cutting some well colored stock. Beauties are scarce. With carnations, the fancy varieties sell at about three dozen for a dollar, but the bulk are not worth much over half that price. Lilium album and rubrum are still in market, also a few longiflorum. Valley has not sold extra well for the past few weeks. Pink amaryllises are being handled in big bunches. Sweet peas are getting scarcer and shorter of stem.

Death of John Rock.

I regret to have to chronicle the death of John Rock, at Niles, on Tuesday last. Mr. Rock was one of the pioneer nurserymen of this coast, starting early in the sixties, near San Jose. He had for twenty years the largest fruit and ornamental place in California. In 1884, together with R. D. Fox, Thomas Meherin, Wm. J. Landers and the late James Hutchison, he organized the California Nursery Co., at Niles, which was then and still is the largest firm on the Pacific coast in the general nursery business. Mr. Rock at the time of his death was general manager and his loss will be irreparable to the trade here. Mr. Rock had been suffering from paralysis for several years and his health had been delicate for some time, but his death was nevertheless unexpected. He was a native of Germany and in his sixty-seventh year. He leaves a daughter, Miss Florence Rock, who has the sympathy of every florist and nurseryman on this coast.

Various Notes.

Attorney George T. Wright appeared before the Board of Works to urge that permits to sell flowers on the sidewalks at points designated by an ordinance of the supervisors be granted to applicants in view of the Superior Court decision that the ordinance is legal. President Schmitz informed him that the board was considering the regulations prepared by L. M. King, to govern the sale of flowers in the free markets. Schmitz stated that the Board would be ready to grant permits next Monday. G.

PANSIES.

Compared with other flowering annuals, I have found the pansy to be the best paying plant of all. We do not grow them for flowers to any extent, but they are purchased by the thousands in the early spring for garden planting and, as the first part of August and, in fact, all through this month is the proper time for planting the seeds, I think a few suggestions are in order. In the first place, the selection of varieties is all important. I have tried many strains here on the coast and each of the important ones have some advantages. Trimardeaus are by far the easiest to raise and they make big, showy plants, and, as many of our dealers sell thousands of young seedlings during the winter season, several months before they are in bloom, this variety is the best to handle, as they make strong plants much sooner than any of the other kinds. They are not, however, as good sellers when in bloom as some of the higher colored sorts, and the grower will find that they run almost exclusively to blues, purples and light colored flowers and to make a good assortment of shades is out of the question. The flowers, however, are of large size and are borne on good stiff stems. The Cassier strain is not of such fast or hardy growth and there is a great difference in the foliage. The flowers are much higher colored, having an abundance of blotched, marbled and striped blooms that are eagerly bought by the public. The Bugnot strain is also of a dwarfer growth than the Trimardeau, but the flowers are beautifully stained and generally run to plenty of light colors, a fact that will be appreciated by all growers. Odiers, especially the large-eyed strain, are splendid sellers and come in the showiest of colors, both plain and blotched. I generally plant a mixture of the Odier, Bugnot, and Cassier strains together and plant a batch of Trimardeau by themselves.

I sow the seeds in flats on soil not over two inches deep, with a light covering of sand and they are large enough to transplant in the open ground by the first of November. There is no advantage in keeping them in boxes after that, as they grow up very spindling during our winter season. The outside beds in which they are transplanted should have been previously dug up several times during the fall and plenty of well rotted manure mixed with the soil. See that the bed is located in such a position that it will not hold a superabundance of water, for, although pansies like plenty of moisture when they are growing, they do not want to have too much of it at the root, and if we are to have another wet spell such as we had last season they must be on high and dry ground to save them. They are gross feeders and do not do their best on sandy soil. Although they are perfectly hardy here, a mulching of light straw I find always advantageous, and then there will be no difficulty in having a succession of blooming plants beginning about the first of February and continuing for three or four months until our planting season is over. G.

PRIMULA POISONING.

I noticed an article in the Review of July 28 regarding Primula obconica poisoning. I have always considered myself immune from plant poisoning; even handling Rhus toxicodendron had no terrors for me. But last winter the tide changed and every time I came in contact with the Primula obconica I was certain of losing a couple of nights' sleep on account of the itching. It even got into my face, causing my eyelids to swell. I would bathe my hands and face before retiring with a solution of baking soda and warm water and then I would be obliged to get up during the night to repeat the application. I do not think the poison deadly, but very annoying. I will discontinue growing them, not for fear of a suit for damages, as suing and getting judgment for damages are far apart. It does not affect everybody that handles it, for my son can handle it, even rubbing the plant and flowers over his hands and face, and it has no ill effects.

John C. Mulder.

In the advertisement of the Metropolitan Material Co., on page 636, the sizes 16x18, 14x20 and 12x16 double strength glass should be quoted at $2.88 and not $2.28 as we had it.

DORONICUMS.

Propagation is simple, as dividing the roots at any time will produce a stock of vigorous growing plants in a short period. The Austrian form, D. austriacum, is the earliest to produce its flowers. Its height is about three feet. The flower stems are much branched, and very free. The leaves are deep green, almost smooth, and very slightly toothed at the edge. The golden yellow flowers have an orange-colored disc, and are about two and a half inches in diameter. D. austriacum Clusi is a dwarf-growing form, more compact in habit, and deeper in the tint of its flowers. The latter open fully three weeks later than the type; in this way it is a gain. From my experience, it seems difficult to obtain true to name, the type being sometimes supplied for Clusi. D. austriacum plantagineum excelsum is, in my opinion, much the finest form of all for any purpose. It grows to a height of about four feet, and is less branching than D. austriacum. The flowers are cup-shaped, and the leaves deeply incised at the edge. The flowers are deep yellow, and the long, stout stems enhance the value of this variety for cutting.—E. Molyneux in Gardeners' Magazine.

BIRTH OF THE ROSE.

There are two traditions as to the origin of the rose. According to Sir John Mandeville, a Jewish maid of Bethlehem (whom Southey names Zillah) was beloved by a brutish sot named Hammel. The maiden rejected this suitor, and he, in revenge, accused Zillah of offenses for which she was condemned to be burned alive. When brought to the stake the flames refused to hurt Zillah, but burned Hammel to a cinder. There she stood in a garden of roses, for the brands which had been kindled became red roses, and those which had not caught fire white ones. These, according to the tradition, were the first roses that bloomed on earth since the loss of paradise.

Then, according to a Mussulman tradition, the rose is thus accounted for: When Mohammed took his journey to heaven the sweat which fell on the earth from the prophet's forehead produced white roses, and that which fell from the animal he rode upon, named Al Borak, produced yellow ones. At the present day the sellers of roses in eastern towns cry aloud in the streets, "The rose was a thorn and the sweat of the prophet Mohammed dropping upon it formed it into a rose."—Wisconsin State Journal.

"I SHOULD not care to be without the REVIEW, as one article is often worth more to me than the cost of many years' subscription."—CHAS. H. ZUNDEL, Haverstraw, N. Y.

BUT THERE must be some reason why you should buy your Ribbons here. There is, a good reason too You buy direct from the manufacturer, which means that "YOU SAVE ALL BETWEEN PROFITS." Realize this, and further—that the Ribbons are the RIGHT RIBBONS for Florists to use, woven specially as to lustre, colors, firmness and touch.

Cutting out all jobbers and commission profits, we give you Ribbons of superior quality to those you now use, and at a less price.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

THE KEW collection has been enriched by two very distinct novelties, interesting if not of trade value. Stapelia Pillansii has stems something like those of S. patula, producing clusters of star-like flowers four to five inches across, of a dark purple brown color. Trichocaulon Pillansii is an addition to a genus not often seen in cultivation, as it inhabits the driest parts of South Africa, and under cultivation usually gets so much moisture that it soon dies. It would probably be called a cactus by one who did not know it. Both these specimens come from N. S. Pillans, who collected them in South Africa.

BEGONIA W. H. EDWARDS has large camellia-shaped flowers of pale salmon color, having white flaking and a pronounced white margin to the petals. The flowers are six inches across. It was given an award of merit at the recent Temple show.

HELIANTHEMUMS are fast increasing in variety and popularity on account of their usefulness in rendering that part of the garden where they are planted especially gay in spring and early summer. One nurseryman catalogues no fewer than thirty varieties. The variety of H. roseum known as superba, is one of the very best.

SO MANY losses occur through the careless packing of cut flowers that some hints gleaned from a recent number of the Irish Farming World may be useful to those who will not heed more lengthy exhortations: "Two infallible rules may be laid down for the right treatment of flowers to be sent away. One is to cut them the day before (preferably not in the heat of the sun), and place them in water in a cellar or other cool place until the time for packing. The second is to pack fairly tightly, filling the box with the flowers or with supplementary paper or dry moss. Flowers should not be packed when wet, as they take up sufficient moisture to last them on their journey if first kept in water as above directed. Shrubby, hard-stemmed subjects, such as lilacs, rhododendrons, and roses last better if some of the bark is peeled off to allow them before they are packed to suck up more moisture than they otherwise could do. Perhaps chrysanthemums are the most enduring flowers in transit, but the narcissus genus and anemones and half-opened tulips last well. Red roses are perishable, but tea roses gathered in bud keep fresh for days."

SCHIZANTHUS WISETONENSIS, one of the most valuable introductions in recent years, should, in order to have it in its best character, be treated as a cool greenhouse plant. Very fine specimens can be grown in a 32-sized pot, and as it is found there is among the seedling a good proportion of plants that develop a dwarf compact habit of growth, this type is admirably adapted for pot culture. A suitable compost is made up of good loam, some well-decayed manure, leaf soil and a little sand. The pots must be well drained.

BEGONIA AVALANCHE is a very handsome white flowered variety recently exhibited by Blackmore & Langdon, of Bath, and awarded a certificate of merit by the floral committee of the Royal Horticultural Society.

CRYPTOMERIA JAPONICA.
Japan Cedar.

In this rarely beautiful and unique Japanese evergreen, we have a most dainty and handsome jardiniere plant for general cultivation; a plant as beautiful and more graceful than the expensive Araucaria Excelsa for which it is often mistaken, but which has the faculty of successfully withstanding the trying atmosphere of the living rooms. It is the only plant at present known which is a perfect substitute for the Araucaria in appearance, and which can be grown with perfect success in any living room. Hence your demand for it will become great.

It is of a beautiful dark green color and makes a decided novel appearance; it is as decorative as a palm in any situation and sure to attract instant attention above all others.

We have made a specialty of this plant for the last few years and have put more on the market than any other house. A few three-year old plants, which were kept to see what they really would become, have satisfied us that they are valuable articles to the florist.

Good stock from 2-inch pots, ready for 4-inch pots, at $5 00 per 100; $45.00 per 1000.

SHORTIA GALACIFOLIA.

This charming little spring-flowering plant is undoubtedly one of the gems of the garden in the early days of the year. In the month of March the drooping, white, prettily-fringed flowers, held aloft above the crimsoned leaves on pink foot-stalks, are perhaps more beautiful than any of the showier spring irises that are in bloom at the same period. Discovered over 100 years ago in the mountainous region of North Carolina, it was lost to botanists for the best part of a century, but introduced into cultivation in this country in 1877. Although since that date the species has been largely imported, it is by no means always to be found in good health in gardens.

A compost of sandy peat and sphagnum moss has been recommended for its culture, and in this the plants are doing excellently with me; but I may say that I have seen plants exhibiting robust vigor in pure fibrous loam, in loam and leaf-mold, and even in soil containing sufficient lime to render the culture of rhododendrons a failure, though soil of the last description was at one time held to be fatal to success with the shortia. One essential evidently is that the compost should be porous, for the plant appears to resent stagnant moisture about its roots in the winter.

Considerable difference of opinion exists as to the correct site for the shortia. Some recommend that it should be grown in shade, and a friend who knows the plant in its native habitat assured me that it carpeted the ground beneath trees; but in this country entire absence of direct sunlight seems to prevent the foliage from assuming that crimson tint which is one of the chief beauties of the plant, and renders it such an attractive object in the autumn. Possibly a position on the north side of a rock-mass, where it may obtain about three hours' sunshine in the summer, is as good a site as can be suggested. My plants are growing in just such a spot, and both situation and soil appear to be to their liking.—S. W. Fitzherbert in the Gardeners' Chronicle.

CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED

BOILER ON GROUND LEVEL.

My boiler pit fills up above the grate bars with seep water every time there comes a stiff rainfall. It seems out of the question to find any way to keep the water out without a big expense. I have taken the boiler out of the pit and will have to find some other way to heat the greenhouse. I propose to set the boiler on a level with the ground floor. I have a two and one-half or three horse-power gas or gasoline engine with a force pump. Can I create suction enough to drain the condensed steam from the pipes into some sort of a receptacle or tank placed below the water line in the boiler and from this receptacle force the water into the boiler with the same pump? The lines of pipes will have a perfect gravity fall. The return pipe will be on the bottom of the floor in the engine room. I could use a steam trap for low pressure but a first-class trap will cost $75 or $100 and I can hardly see my way to buy a trap inasmuch as I anticipate changing the plant next year. With a steam trap one has to always have five or ten pounds of steam to show on the gauge before the trap will do good work. I heat with steam.

E. R. O.

By placing a reservoir of considerable capacity, say thirty gallons or more, below the level of the returns and connecting same to a steam trap, not a "return steam trap," but simply a trap which catches and condenses the steam so that water only goes into the reservoir, you can connect a force pump to the engine so as to pump the condensation from the hot well, or reservoir, and return it to the boiler.

Another plan which might be used is to run the plant as a hot water plant during mild weather and operate the pump as above described during such times as the hot water will not do the work. The only loss with such a plan would be the loss of water in the system, which would have to be drawn off each time the change was made. Valves would have to be placed in the return pipes so as to allow for a gravity circulation while using hot water, which would be closed and the condensation caught in the reservoir and pumped into the boiler during severe weather when steam would be necessary. The one trouble with any scheme which does not provide for a gravity system is that if the pump fails to work the boiler may get dry. As a temporary affair, however, the pumping engine can be used. But unless some one is in constant attendance there is more or less risk. Many large plants, where firemen are constantly on hand, use the pump exclusively. In fact, in such cases it is really more economical than to go to the expense of excavating and building pits.

ANNOUNCEMENT !

GRAND NEW WHITE CARNATION FOR 1905

WE WILL DISSEMINATE early in 1905 a new Seedling White Carnation. Don't place your orders for a new white until after the forthcoming exhibition of The American Carnation Society in Chicago during January next, by which time we will have fully demonstrated its superior qualities; parentage, Norway x Lawson. Is more vigorous than either, and is superior in every way. Stems two inches longer than Lawson, flower larger, better formed, and sweet scented; does not burst. In short, it is a world beater. A modern, high-class commercial and exhibition variety. By far the best white variety yet raised. It has never yet been exhibited. We still have it under number (119, '01). Name and list price will be announced later. Write us for any information concerning it. Field-grown Carnation Plants ready now:

CHEMICALS FOR ROSES.

The following mixture has been recommended as a complete fertilizer for roses under glass:

Superphosphate (high grade), 130 lbs.; sulphate ammonia, 10 lbs.; nitrate soda, 30 lbs.; sulphate potash, 40 lbs.

It is recommended to add one ounce of this mixture to one gallon of water for two square yards of bench or bed surface once a week as the plants need it. This is equivalent to three pounds to forty-eight gallons of water applied to 864 square feet of bench or bed surface, or about six ounces to fifty gallons of water for 100 square feet. This is the right strength for weakly plants. Twelve ounces could be used to fifty gallons of water per 100 feet for strong plants once in ten days or two weeks, as the plants need it. It is safer to use the fifty gallons per 100 feet standard of application, as this is about the amount of water usually applied in an ordinary watering to 100 square feet of bed six inches deep.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

My adv. in the Review did the trick. Thanks.—R. M. Schultz, Madison, N. J.

VIBURNUM TOMENTOSUM.

The beautiful shrub generally known as Viburnum plicatum is really a variety of this species. In its typical state V. tomentosum has a flat, umbellate inflorescence, the centre flowers of which are small and structurally perfect; whilst those on the margin are large and imperfect—i. e., they have no stamens or pistil. In the variety plicatum all the flowers are of this showy sterile kind, and the inflorescence becomes more rounded in form, resembling that of the common "snowball tree," V. opulus sterilis. Introduced from Japan by Fortune about fifty-five years ago, twenty years in advance of its parent type, V. plicatum has always been the better known plant of the two. Had one to choose between them, preference would perhaps be given to this one; but as there is no such necessity, one may well grow both, for they are not only very beautiful, but are more distinct from each other than many separate species are.

This season V. tomentosum has been particularly fine. Its branches have the same stiff, horizontal pose so characteristic of V. plicatum, and they bear the flowers (which are white) in similar double rows of corymbs, each about 4 inches across. J. Veitch & Sons have recently distributed a form of V. tomentosum with an inflorescence similar to that of the type but even finer; they have named it Mariesii.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

In the adv. of the Niagara Cement and Concrete Co., page 551, issue of August 11, the prices quoted on galvanized wire rose stakes should read per 1,000.

BEATING THE WHITE FLY.

Last winter I related my experience with the white fly. By persistent syringing with hot water I destroyed nearly all the swarm. A few escaped but gave me no further trouble until the planting season had passed, when I found they were injuring my stock plants. Another campaign was needed and winter tactics impossible. Studious observation proved that they were quite partial to certain individual plants and, while visiting many, assembled in force and deposited their eggs on but a few. This was the key to their destruction. I used those plants as lures and traps, standing them in open order, so as not to unduly disturb the flies when handling the plants.

After dusk, when the flies do not take wing readily, I prepare a pail of water at the temperature of 120 degrees, and a kettle of scalding water to maintain the temperature during the operation. By handling the plants gently and quickly inverting and immersing them for a second or so I destroy the flies and their eggs and "set 'em up again."

Some will escape and the operation may need repeating, but it is done so easily and rapidly and is so thoroughly effective that I have no longer any dread of the little rascals. J. T.

ADIANTUM CROWEANUM

The New Maidenhair Fern.

AFTER A THOROUGH and careful examination by all the experts and critics in the trade at the St. Louis Convention, and stood the test so well, the progressive, keen and up-to-date florist should this year buy this standard introduction that is freely conceded to be the best keeping, lasting and money-making, both for cut fronds and plants of all Adiantums ever introduced to the trade. : : :

A Great Acquisition.

The best of all ferns for cut fronds. Brings the highest prices. The easiest to grow and the easiest to sell. Has received the highest encomiums from the leading cut flower dealers in the country.

ADIANTUM CROWEANUM originated at Utica, N.Y., about fourteen years ago, and has been extensively grown by the original owner, Mr. Crowe, who has received phenomenal prices for the cut fronds in the New York and other markets, and has created a great demand for it. Buy now. Buy liberally and reap the benefits.

The fronds are long, elegantly proportioned and of a texture that renders it the best keeper and shipper of all Adiantums. It is a very free and continuous grower, requires no rest and responds readily to fertilizers. Anyone can grow it and get good money for it.

HOW IT PLEASES AFTER TRAVELING ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

Allow me to congratulate you on Adiantum Croweanum, which arrived here in fine condition. I thank you for sending such fine stock and trust I shall have success in growing it.

Respectfully, Grace Hill Nursery.

HOW THE CUT FRONDS SHIPPED ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.

With reference to a quantity of fronds sent to Liverpool, Eng., the recipient writes from that port, June 17, 1904, as follows: "The ferns were as fresh as when they were first cut and I believe you can safely send them to Europe, providing they are as carefully packed as these were. They are simply perfect." [Signed] Thomas R. Proctor.

Many strong endorsements given in our Circular of Testimonials, free on request.

Still about 15,000 fine, strong, vigorous 3-inch pot plants to offer. Send in your orders now, and have them filled at once at the following low prices for something entirely new.

$5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100; $250.00 per 1000. 25 at 100 rate; 250 at 1000 rate.

Also Stock Plants from bench, in size requiring 8 to 10-inch pots, $9.00 per doz.; $67.50 per 100; $600.00 per 1000.

A booklet on growing this Fern, by the originator, Mr. Crowe, free with every shipment.

DAHLIAS NOT BLOOMING.

I have planted some nice varieties of dahlias. I first started them in the greenhouse in February, so that they were strong plants when planted outside in May. They are full of buds all the time, and very healthy, but do not bloom. The buds seem to blast and rot. We water them with a spray from the hose nozzle. A considerable portion of the day they are exposed to the sun without shade. I do not know anything about growing dahlias. Any information you can give me as to how to protect the flowers and make them bloom will be appreciated. Wm. Larsen.

Mr. Larsen's trouble is mostly a result of too much water. Dahlias love plenty of water, as well as good rich soil, yet both of these can be given in excess. A thorough watering once or twice a week, according to location and condition of the weather, is very beneficial.

The way we grow dahlias is to plant them in fairly rich soil, which has been thoroughly plowed and then harrowed a number of times to thoroughly pulverize and firm the soil. On our heavier soils we use disc and Acme harrows. The plants or roots are then planted and we cultivate, not too deeply, say, about three to four inches in the beginning. As soon as the plants come into bud and bloom we cultivate only one to two inches deep, but continue to stir the surface soil after every rain the entire season. During excessive drouth we irrigate every six to twelve days, according to the conditions of the weather, and after each irrigation we stir the soil again, so as to keep the surface loose and fine and prevent from baking. A stirring of the surface soil, nine times out of ten, is far more beneficial than an application of water. After the plants have been blooming profusely for some time and the blooms become smaller, we give a top dressing of fertilizer, which keeps up the size of the flowers.

COIL BOILER.

I have a three-quarter-span house 20x 100, one foot of glass in side walls and gables glass, eight feet to ridge. How shall I go to work to build a coil boiler out of 1½-inch pipe? I want the pressure system with safety valve and no expansion tank. Cord wood for fuel and 65 degrees required when the temperature is 10 above zero outdoors. How many 2-inch feed and return pipes will be needed. Location Puget Sound; house to be used for cucumbers. J. L. K.

A boiler such as you desire was illustrated in the Florists' Review of December 31, 1903, page 269, and its construction described. To provide the heat required in a house of the dimensions noted it would be necessary that you use 250 feet of 1¼-inch pipe in the construction of your boiler. This will require about eight square feet of grate surface. If you construct the boiler with grate bars about four feet long and a firebox two feet wide by arranging the pipes above the firebox with return bends, it will be possible to keep the boiler within comparatively close limits. Two ten-hole manifold tees can be used to provide means for caring for the return water, as well as the heated water. If the boiler is made six feet long the manifolds can be used at the rear of the boiler and three return bends employed in the construction of each coil, i. e., four lengths of pipe will be used to make up the coil. Ten of these placed inside the bricked up furnace will give the required heating surface. The lowest pipe should be about fifteen inches above the grate bars and at least twelve inches should be allowed below the bars for the ash pit.

I do not think it will be satisfactory or economical to attempt to operate a plant of this description without an expansion tank unless automatic feed water connections of some description are provided. The boiler does not contain a very large volume of water and for that reason is liable to much more violent changes than a boiler containing more water. If an expansion tank can be connected to the manifold of the boiler entered by the return pipes and located sixteen to twenty feet above the boiler, a good pressure will be maintained and more satisfaction obtained than by the other method.

Your house requires 800 feet of radiation, to provide which will take thirteen runs of 2-inch pipe, i. e., 1,300 lineal feet. If two of these are used as flow pipes the others may be made up into manifolds or coils to act as returns, six in one group and five in another. If properly graded these may be arranged on the side walls or under the benches of the house if it has raised benches.

CAPACITY OF FLOWS.

How many feet of 1¼-inch pipe will a 3-inch main heat successfully with low pressure steam? How many feet will 4-inch and 5-inch mains supply? Is 2,000 lineal feet too much for the 3-inch or 7,000 feet too much for the 4-inch?

K. F. C.

Under normal conditions, where the runs are not too long, a 3-inch main should supply 2,170 feet of 1¼-inch pipe, a 4-inch main 3,600 feet and a 5-inch main 7,000 feet. These are conservative estimates and under conditions where sudden changes do not prevail the 4-inch main might successfully supply 7,000 feet of 1¼-inch pipe. L. C. C.

HAIL ASSOCIATION.

The Florists' Hail Association held its annual meeting at St. Louis August 18, the many members present expressing their continued satisfaction with the management of its affairs. The past year has been the most expensive in the history of the association, but its credit is in no way impaired.

The following is the summary of operations:

Balance, Aug. 1, 1903	$12,761.26
Receipts	15,712.27
Total	28,473.53
Losses paid	$19,266.60
Expenditures	4,021.87
Balance Aug. 1, 1904	5,185.06
Total	28,473.53

The cash balance of $5,185.06 is in addition to $16,400 invested for the emergency fund and $11,400 invested for the reserve fund.

ECLIPSE, our introduction for 1905 is a grand pink carnation, lighter in color than Lawson with no cerise or magenta shadings. Price, $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. Special price on large lots.

LADY BOUNTIFUL and THE BELLE, $6.00 per 100; $50.00 per 1000. We have large stocks of the three varieties and can guarantee early delivery.

Also the 1904 novelties and the best of the standard sorts.

Our stock is grown to produce strong, healthy cuttings in preference to bloom.

RICHMOND, IND.

Carnation planting is drawing to a close and from all reports and appearances the plants did remarkably well, considering the dry spell during the past three weeks. Among the varieties that attracted my especial attention at E. G. Hill Co.'s place was The Cardinal, 7,000 of which occupy two benches in the mammoth house. The plants look clean and vigorous, making new breaks and sending out new shoots that speak well for the variety. It is unquestionably a winner and will appeal especially to those growers who have had success with Estelle. An improved Estelle will mean a deal to those who can cut long-stemmed and full-sized flowers at a time when the old favorite, Estelle, lacks in these qualities. Over 75,000 have already been booked up.

Lawson and Enchantress have been planted in large quantities, and among the whites Lady Bountiful takes first rank. A great demand is expected for this variety during the coming season. Fred Burki is being tested here in small quantity. Like its famous parent, the Lawson, it seems to have adapted itself to Indiana soil and does as well as in its native state, western Pennsylvania.

Exhibition chrysanthemums, as usual, are up to the standard and some fine specimens will be shown during the coming shows, both east and west. Not the least and, candidly speaking, above any other rose on the place that drew my attention was Etna, Mr. Hill's own seedling, a red rose that promises much vigor of growth, color and form of bloom, stem, etc. Five benches have been planted and a finer sight, even at this early season, it would be hard to point out.

Their recent acquisition in realty is a fifty-acre farm in the vicinity of the Richmond asylum. It is not likely that potatoes or cabbage will grace this site, but something more remunerative in their own lines.

The B. K. & B. Floral Co., on Asylum avenue, has recently enlarged the range by one house of 20x240, all planted with carnations. Their own Richmond Gem, which will be disseminated during the coming spring, is well worthy of a trial by every grower looking for a variety to take the place of Crane, Apollo and the like. As a grower it is in the first rank. Its color is ideal, the stem all that could be desired, and its blooming qualities surpassed by no variety. Enchantress, Lawson and Queen have been planted largely, the latter having proved the best and most profitable white on the place.

At E. T. Grave's things in general look clean, healthy and attractive. Their rose-growing venture has long since passed the experimental stage, having proved a great success. They not only grow roses in quantity, but grow them remarkably well.

E. Ruch is putting the finishing touches to the two carnation houses built this summer.

Florist Gause is about to move to his new residence, adjoining his greenhouses on National road.

Convention talk is ripe and the two standbys, E. G. Hill and John Evans, are sure to be on deck in St. Louis. X.

RELIEVES THEM OF "SURPLUS."

We are in receipt of the following letter from a well-known plant house:

Sometime during May or June a man called at our office and induced us to subscribe to a scheme he had for disposing of surplus stock. The fee to belong to this "association" was something like $1.50 or $2. On July 2, we mailed a list of surplus stock to this association and the letter has been returned by the postal authorities marked "Parties cannot be found."

If this gentleman is a fake he should be published to prevent others falling in his trap. We inclose the printed matter he had on top of his surplus list, also the envelope showing same returned to us. Do you know anything about him?

If you can enlighten us any on this matter, you will very much oblige.

The printed matter was a heading for a list printed "Nurserymen & Florists' Surplus Association, P. O. Box 395, Louisville, Ky." The envelope was correctly addressed as above. The postmaster at Louisville had apparently forwarded it, readdressing, to John M. Brown, Newport, Ky. The postmaster at Newport returned it to the writer after holding it from July 5 to August 5.

FLORIST TIES THE KNOT.

James S. McMahon, the retail florist of Jersey City, is a justice of the peace and able to execute "the whole order" when it is wedding work. The way it sometimes happens is related as follows by a local paper:

Justice of the Peace James S. McMahon was putting together some funeral flowers in his place of business at 392 Grove street Saturday afternoon, when a young man and young woman entered. The judge put the last small blue flower into the final word of the inscription, "We Mourn Our Loss," and then politely inquired of what service he could be to the couple.

"You could marry us, if you would be so kind," answered the young man, "and please hurry up, as we have to catch a train."

"Wait a minute, if you please," said Judge McMahon, as he retired behind the ice box. He reappeared inside of a minute with a fine and large wedding bell made of pink and white roses. He suspended it from a convenient hook in the ceiling, and invited the couple to stand underneath. They obeyed, and as they stood there holding hands they were united "for better or worse, for richer or poorer."

Judge McMahon said he was glad at being able to accommodate them, and they said he was very kind. The happy bridegroom gave the magistrate a fee "in proportion to the importance of the service rendered."

ANNOUNCEMENT.....

WE TAKE PLEASURE IN ANNOUNCING THE

New Carnation—Fred Burki

Which Will be Disseminated in 1905—Commencing in January.

Fred Burki is the result of a cross between Lawson and a seedling of much merit; the latter being the seed parent. It possesses all the good qualities to induce the most conservative growers to include it among best whites.

HERE ARE A FEW OF ITS MERITORIOUS POINTS:

1st. The blooms come perfect and uniform, averaging 3 to 3½ inches in size.

2d. The stem measures from 20 to 30 inches, being stiff and erect and resembles that of Lawson.

3d. It never crops, but yields continuously from November until July.

4th. The calyx is perfect; showing no tendency of bursting.

5th. Its keeping qualities, a point not to be overlooked, are second to none and equal to the best.

6th. It transplants easily and roots like the proverbial weed.

Those who saw it growing are unanimous in declaring the FRED BURKI the ideal white in every respect. It scored 88 points at the Detroit Carnation Convention, receiving a certificate of merit. Don't hesitate placing your order for FRED BURKI. It will prove a good investment.

PRICE—$12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000. 250 at 1000 rate. Orders filled strictly in rotation.

ECLIPSE —OUR INTRODUCTION FOR— 1905

A GRAND PINK CARNATION, lighter in color than Lawson, with no cerise or magenta shadings. A color that withstands the brightest sun's rays without the objectional shadings or bleachings at the edges of the petals. The true merits of this variety are summed up in four points.

1st. A strong free growth and of easy propagation.
2nd. Large 3½-inch flowers of a beautiful dark shade of clear pink. No imperfect or faded blooms.
3rd. Extra long stems, perfectly upright and stiff. No short or weak stems under any conditions.
4th. Comes into flower with the earliest blooms and produces freely and continually throughout the season. Has never shown any cropping tendency.

We have a large stock and can guarantee early delivery, $12 per 100; $100 per 1000.
Write for special prices on larger lots.

We have benched large stocks of the two Grand White Carnations

Lady Bountiful and The Belle

And will be in a position to supply good well rooted cuttings in quantity for early delivery, $6 per 100; $50 per 1000.

Also all the best of the 1904 Novelties, such as FLAMINGO, CRUSADER, NELSON FISHER, INDIANAPOLIS, MRS. PATTEN, WHITE LAWSON, THE PRESIDENT and JUDGE HINSDALE.

THE BEST OF THE STANDARD SORTS ARE ON OUR LIST.

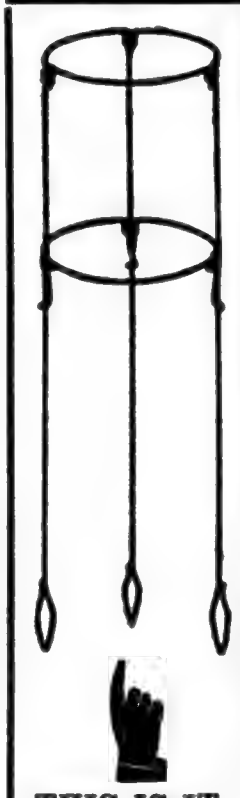
DRAINING BOILERS.

Is it preferable to let the old water out of the boiler and pipes and substitute fresh water, if the water was in use for a year or more, or is the old water all right? O. H. T.



If the water which is used were pure and free from suspended earth or sediment, there would be no objection to allowing it to remain in the system indefinitely. Such water is difficult to obtain and all hydrant or well water either carries sufficient dirt or mineral salts, such as lime or magnesia, to render it desirable to drain the system once in six months at least, and place therein some good boiler cleaning preparation which will remove scale and other deposits from the interior of the pipes and the boiler. Such deposits or incrustations thicken the walls of the pipes, impede the flow of water and lessen radiation, thus making unnecessary inroads upon the coal pile. If for no other reason, the system should be cleaned as thoroughly as possible twice, or oftener, each year.

PIPING.

I have built two houses 18x50, side walls five feet with eighteen inches glass. Have a Weathered No. 6 boiler and 1,200 feet of 4-inch pipe. What will be the best way to arrange the piping to heat and save fuel? W. P.

To insure a temperature of 60 degrees during severe weather your houses will each require six pipes the length of the house. These might be arranged as follows: Three flow pipes carried from the boiler along the exposed side of the house across the end most distant from boiler and return under the bench on the opposite side. If the houses are attached this scheme can be used more successfully than will be the case if the houses are independent. It will require on this basis 360 feet of pipe for each house, or 720 feet for the two. If a temperature of 70 degrees is required the piping should be increased, either by placing a loop under the center bench of the house or by adding a fourth pipe to those going around the house. L. STEAM BOILER FOR HOT WATER.

I have a carnation house 20x65 and a violet house 20x35, north and south, which I wish to heat with hot water. Will 4-inch cast iron pipe answer, and how many runs will be required? The outdoor temperature sometimes goes as low as 20 degrees below zero. I can get a steam boiler 3x6 feet, which I want to use for hot water. J. J.

By having the opening for supplying water from the boiler to the pipes enlarged to 4-inch and the return opening made the same size there should be no difficulty in heating your houses with an upright tubular boiler such as is used for steam heating purposes, provided the boiler has sufficient heating capacity. This can only be determined from the size, length and number of flues contained in the boiler.

The house 20x65 with water at 180 degrees will require six 4-inch pipes the length of the house to provide a temperature of 60 degrees during severe weather, and the house 20x35 to maintain a temperature of 40 degrees during cold spells will require four 4-inch pipes the length of the house.

PIPING.

We have a large boiler which gives us one 4-inch flow and one 4-inch return for each house. We would like to make a change as indicated in the enclosed sketch. Each house is 20x100, with shed along one end. The flow passes along the end, with the expansion tank at the highest point. Then the pipe branches into two 4-inch which in turn each divide into two. The pipes drop fifteen inches and at the boiler there is two feet fall. Let me know what you think of it. A. J. R.

Your plan seems to be a thoroughly practical one and will undoubtedly work well. I see no reason for putting in the two sets of U bends, however. The main flow pipe can as well be discharged into a manifold T with four outlets as into a U and this into two separate U's. Another improvement would be found in placing the expansion tank on the return pipe near where it enters the boiler, rather than in the riser near its highest point and where the water is hottest. The flow will be less impeded and a higher temperature maintained in the flow pipes by placing the expansion tank on the return as suggested. L. C. C.

How to Destroy Cabbage Worms.

THE SLUG SHOT can be used lightly or heavily, and the cabbage suffers no harm. The cabbage forms its head by the interior growth; it throws off its earlier and outside leaves, and no dust can enfold within its head.

Apply SLUG SHOT with a Duster (see illustration), sieve it over the plants or full grown cabbage. The powder is very fine and goes a long way in field or garden.

Is Hammond's Slug Shot Safe to Use?

PLEASE LISTEN.

We work in it constantly for months at a time, with no ill effects ensuing.

☞ To eat SLUG SHOT in quantity to do harm to either man or animal is not practicable. So far as feeding chickens, pigs, or cows with heads of cabbage on which SLUG SHOT was applied, it has been done for years with impunity. No poisonous matter can be absorbed into the leaf.

New Steel Valley or Side Gutter

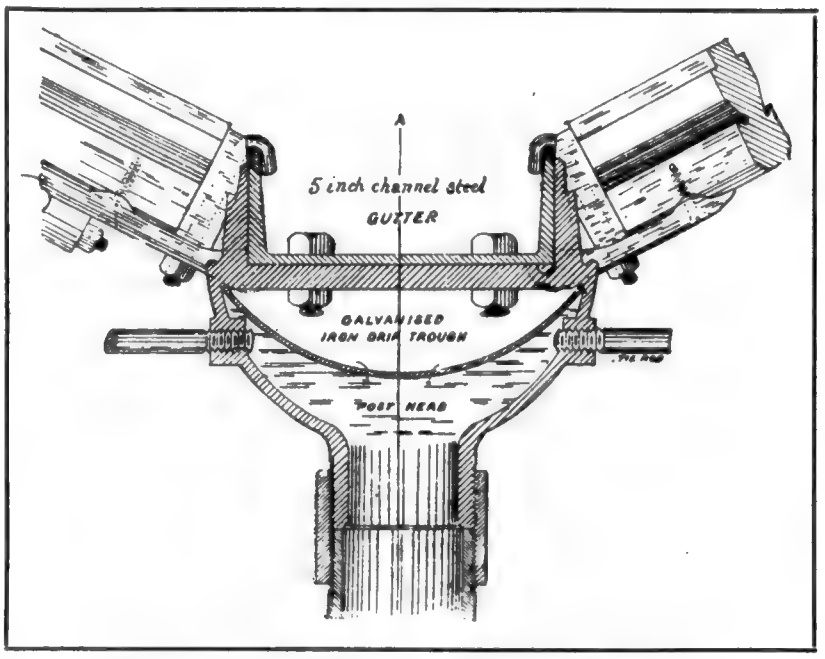
ABSENCE OF SHADOW.



The width of the gutter being only five inches, there is cast the minimum amount of shadow with proper allowance for foot room.

NEW SASH-BAR BRACKET.

This is an entirely new design. An iron bottom plate is held to the gutter by a hook bolt. One end of the bottom plate projects under the gutter. This bottom plate carries the drip from the sash-bar into the drip trough. The end of the sash-bar is held away from the gutter, and is exposed to the circulation of air. The end grain of the wood is not broken by a screw. No other method of attaching sash-bars to a gutter affords as great a protection against end rot. The brackets can be set to suit any width of glass.

NO DRIP.

A galvanized iron drip-trough catches all drip and leakage and drains it into the hollow post tops, and thence down the posts into the under drains.

(Patented United States and Foreign Countries.)

STRENGTH.

This gutter will carry safely a load of 4000 lbs. between supports.

ROOF ENTIRELY SUPPORTED by the GUTTER.

Our gutter ironwork is arranged so that the roof may be supported by purlin trusses and by tie rods. This does away with all supports except the gutter posts.

POST TOPS.

These are threaded for regular two-inch pipe coupling, and this ensures the roof from lifting off the posts.

JOINTS between SECTIONS

The gutter sections are cut to exact lengths and the ends drilled for bolts. In order to seal the joints, the sides of the post tops are carried up, as shown in the cut, no open cracks are then left.

NO TRIMMING OF ENDS OF BARS.

For standard pitch of roof the ends of bars are left square.

Price includes Gutter Channel, Drip Troughs, Sash-Bar Brackets, Bolts, Post Tops, Post Feet.

Ventilating Apparatus

The Wolf Improved System is the most convenient and durable. One single machine operates houses 50 to 400 feet long. One No. 6 double machine operates houses 200 to 700 feet long. CIRCULATING PUMPS.

In an answer to a query which appeared in the REVIEW of July 14 it is stated that "it is not best to endeavor to circulate hot water in runs of pipe exceeding 100 feet in length without a circulating pump. Are circulating pumps largely used? Are they the ordinary steam, gasoline, or hot air pumps? I am building a house 50x300 feet for lettuce and tomatoes and want to heat with hot water. A. W. C.

Any slow-acting force pump operated by steam, gasoline or electric power can be used to pump the water out of the returns and deliver it into the boilers. If you can arrange your buildings so as to have the heating plant in the middle of the houses, rather than at one end, you can undoubtedly use a gravity system. On long runs the gravity system works too slowly. The water loses too much of its heat in making the trip from and to the boiler, so that the distant parts of the houses are apt to lack heat. A circulating pump will quicken the flow and deliver the water back to the boiler at a much higher temperature than would be possible on long runs with a gravity system, and in that way supply water of more nearly even temperature to all parts of the system, thus insuring a more uniform temperature. L. C. C.

PROBLEM:

If a man does his spraying and pumping in ½ the time, at ¼ the cost, with ⅛ as much work, and uses only $\frac{1}{16}$ as much space, and gets 4 times the water, at 3 times the pressure, from 2 times as many hose, with 1 starting of the machine.

HOW DOES HE DO IT?

ANSWER:

He puts in a Gasoline PUMPING ENGINE

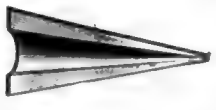
NEW CASTLE, IND.

The prospects here for a successful year in cut flowers appear to be very bright. The different large concerns are making an excellent showing with young stock. The obnoxious leaf roller is somewhat prevalent in this section and it is only by persistently picking them off that they are kept down.

While Heller Bros. have always been rose growers exclusively, they are making a departure in planting a number of their houses with carnations. This is more of an experiment and, if successful, will undoubtedly become a regular part of their business. The new house which was recently put up by them is one of the widest for its length in this country, it being 47x265. There are twelve benches in this house, six being planted with Brides and the others with Maids. One of the Beauty houses is yielding a very fine cut, stems measuring as high as thirty inches, which is rather good for this time of the year. Aside from installing a new 100 horse-power hot-water boiler, erecting a good-sized propagating house and making a few necessary alterations before cold weather sets in, no changes will be made.



Dittman's Beauty houses, situated just across the street from Heller Bros., are in good condition and Mr. Dittman is getting some very good blooms.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. is also making a fine showing with their stock, particularly some of their Brides and Maids, which are doing exceptionally well and making remarkable growth.

IRON GREENHOUSES

The Duplex Gutter and the Duplex Eaves have solved the question of how to build up-to-date greenhouses as durable as the iron frame greenhouses at high prices, and nearly as cheap as wooden houses. See the cut that represents the new Duplex Eaves, the most durable, strongest and simplest to erect. Any common laborer can set them as perfect as an expert mechanic. It is perfection in construction. No ice or snow to darken your houses when light means money. Positively no shade from the Duplex Eaves. Costs only about $2.00 per foot, including Duplex Gutters and Eaves, Iron Posts for Gutters, Iron Purlins with Posts, Tees and Floor Plates, Center Posts with Plates and Bases.

STANDARD VENTILATING MACHINES, complete with double strong Pipe, Cypress Sash Bars and Ventilating Sash. Investigate the proposition and convince yourself of the fact. Also note the simplest steam return Trap made; just what a florist needs and a coal dealer condemns. Catalogues and circulars free.

WE CAN REDUCE YOUR COAL BILL!

WE DID IT FOR OTHERS LAST WINTER

ALTHOUGH IT WAS ONE OF THE MOST SEVERE WE EVER HAD; EVERY FLORIST WHO USED A "PIERSON" FOR HEATING WAS SATISFIED; THEY ALL SPEAK ALIKE. HERE ARE LETTERS FROM TWO:

SAVED ABOUT 15 PER CENT. IN FUEL

MONTAGUE BROS., Lima, Ohio, write:

"The past season was the severest we ever passed through in greenhouse work. Winter caught us before we were fully prepared for it. Your 'Pierson' boiler stood the test in every particular, and did the work as it was claimed to do. We were able to save about 15 per cent. in fuel, having had a boiler of different make in the same house the two preceding seasons. It is very easy to fire; the draft is arranged almost perfectly, and consequently it is a very quick heater. After the water is hot it takes very little fuel to keep an even heat. It is the easiest boiler to clean we have ever seen."

LESS FUEL THAN ANY OTHER

Mr. THOS. JENKINSON Gardener to A. R. Peacock, Esq., Pittsburg Pa., writes:

"The 'Pierson' boiler which you installed here September, 1903, has suited the purpose admirably. I know of no boiler that can give better satisfaction. Last winter was a very severe one here, and the 'Pierson' boiler got a thorough test, and proved itself more than able for the work. A very important feature is the quick response when firing is commenced; it heats quicker and consumes less fuel than any other boiler I know."

CONVENTION IMPRESSIONS.

The REVIEW has already given so complete an account of the St. Louis convention that little can be added. Yet a few impressions, I trust, will not be unwelcome. What little we have to say about it will be guided by sincerity and no bouquet throwing or "taffy" will be indulged in. Compliments and pleasant words are easy to express, and a mutual pleasure to all, but misleading to the absent ones.

The hall where the ceremonies took place was one of the best the society has ever met in; a spacious stage, finely decorated and a seating capacity for an audience that would have held four times the number of florists that entered its doors. We did not admire that primitive pulpit-like erection that allowed only a view of President Breitmeyer's head and neck and obscured his portly figure.

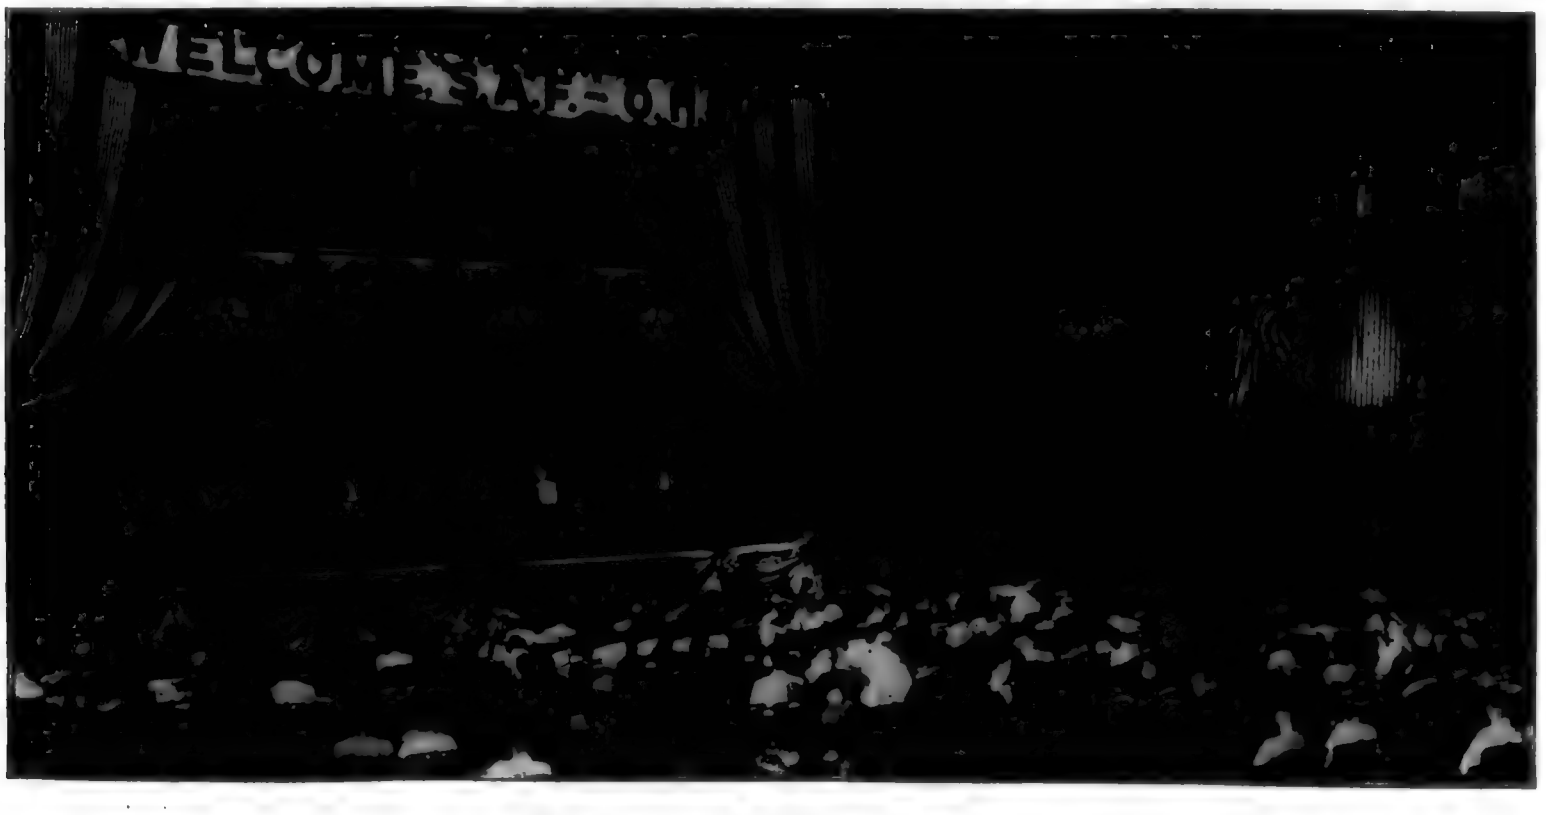
The short address of welcome from Mr. Walbridge was eloquent. The fact that Mr. Walbridge is president of the Business Men's League of St. Louis, and likely some day to be Missouri's governor, has taught him the value of time and that "Brevity is the soul of wit." The reply by the society's orator, Robert Craig, was eloquent in voice, sentiment and facts, and all honor to Robert for coming out flatfooted in his regret that ornamental horticulture was so meagerly represented at the World's Fair. And while on that subject, could not one million of the money spent have been taken from those stupendous buildings and devoted to trees and shrubs to relieve the monotony of those many miles of plaster walls?

The president's address was, we think, the most complete and practical of any in the history of our society, and it is evident that no president has ever taken a greater interest or held a more earnest desire to see the society advance in the right direction than Philip Breitmeyer. Phil, who is not a noisy man, made a strenuous effort to raise his voice so that all could hear him, and succeeded, which is more than can be said of several ex-presidents.

We think, on the whole, the essays, discussions and debates on several questions were above the average of the past. How difficult it is now to rake up a subject that is strictly floriculture. When the society was young, there was an abundance of practical subjects which we were all glad to hear discoursed upon. They have been about all ventilated and thrashed out, yet that paper by Mr. Peterson will be found most valuable and a guide to many.

Nothing was finer than Mr. Pettigrew's essay on the influence and benefits of our public parks. The cheapest, yet best and most glorious investment for a city of any size, is its public parks. They have a greater influence for good than a church of any denomination. Let us have more parks and we shall need less police.

E. G. Hill's paper on "An American Type of Roses" was worthy of the man, and that's saying enough. And the questions fired at him showed an interest in this great subject. Mr. Hill is an explorer in American horticulture, an American Vilmorin, and that grey head of his does a lot of thinking.



We greatly enjoyed Mr. Vaughan's idea of the "Ideal Employe." It was lively and most attractively delivered and his version of an ideal employe is greatly to be desired, for he certainly would be ideal. Such an entertaining debate followed that we refrained from raising our weak voice.

There is a large measure of truth in the opinion of many that the conduct of an employe is moulded somewhat by the character and treatment of the employer. But that only goes so far. If all employes were turned out of one mould it would be easy to control, elevate and bring them to the ideal, as you can a steam pump or gas engine. How different is the human animal! Characters differ as widely as the poles. If we were all saints what a humdrum world this would be. If there was no room on top for the bright, industrious man of integrity, there would be no ambition. We must have the sloven as well as the worker, sin as well as virtue, sorrow as well as joy, pain as well as pleasure, and if we were all ideal, the world of men and women would vanish. Next year's essay on "The Ideal Employer" will be worth a long journey to hear, especially if assigned to the Reverend Dr. Carmody. The employer is in a higher position than the employe and his responsibilities are far greater and his influence toward a good understanding between himself and employe rests mostly on employer.

That story of Mr. O'Mara's illustrating the speed of the Chicago business man must be heard to be relished. "Go slowly," said the slowly swinging pendulum of the south. "Plenty of time," spoke the shorter pendulum further north, but the lively timepiece of Chicago said, "Get there, get there, get there, get there," at 300 beats to the minute.

Friday morning exercises were very pleasant and the talks by so-called foreigners were highly interesting. Mr. Brown, of London, over on the banks of the Clyde, was inspiring and his style of man is raising our profession to a higher plane. The gentleman from Winnipeg told us how in a few years a flat, treeless prairie with less than three feet elevation in five miles has now picturesque parks, shaded streets and all that makes our older cities such pleasant places in which to dwell. I don't like to hear men who hold their knife and fork as we do, and speak the same language, be called foreigners. I would like to say, as did the immortal Tom Paine, "The world is my country and humanity my religion."

Mr. Carmody presented the remembrance of the society to the president in his matchless method. No one can

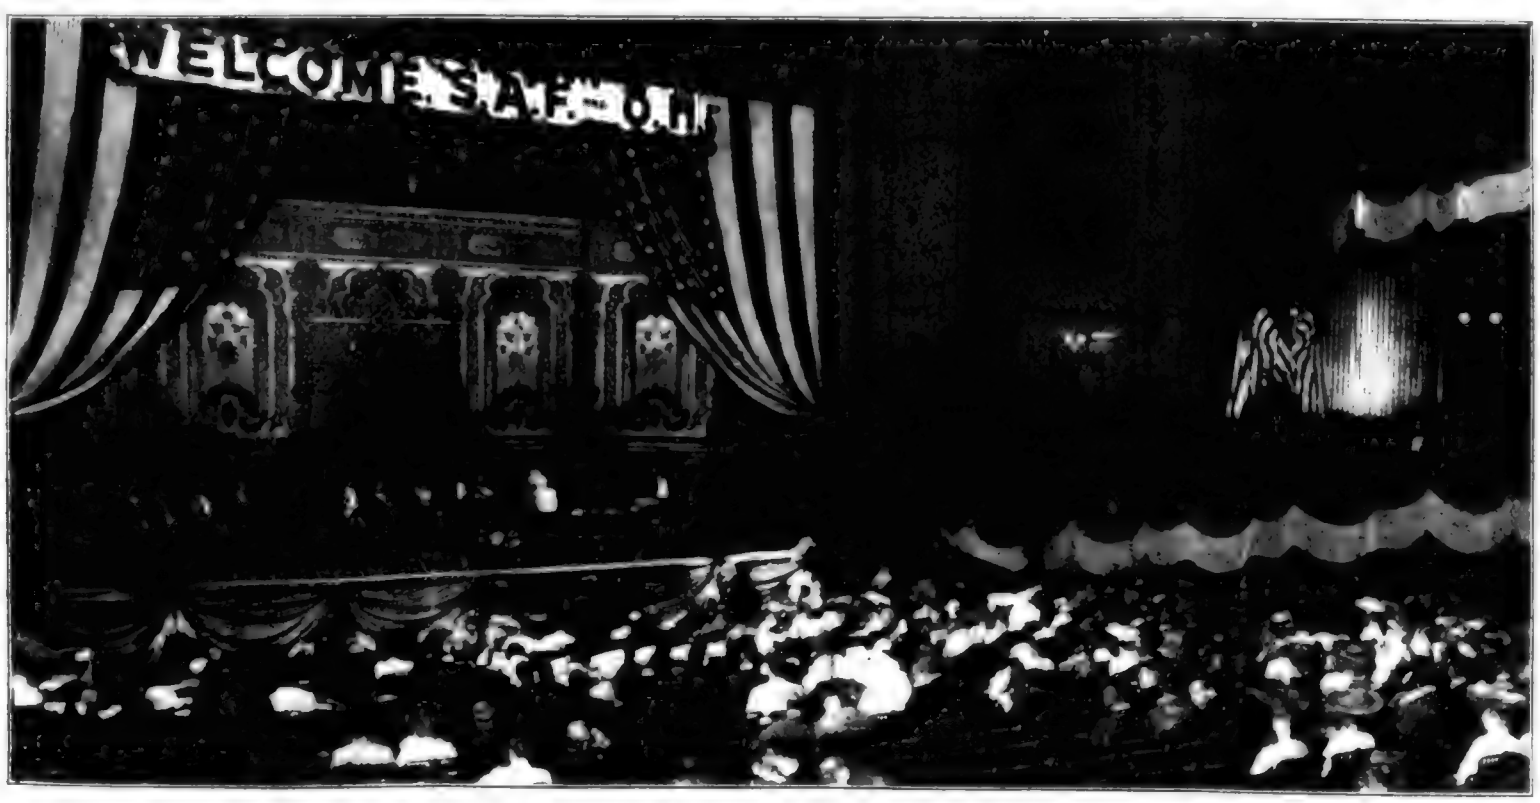
They have been about all ventilated and thrashed out, yet that paper by Mr. Peterson will be found most valuable and a guide to many.

Nothing was finer than Mr. Pettigrew's essay on the influence and benefits of our public parks. The cheapest, yet best and most glorious investment for a city of any size, is its public parks. They have a greater influence for good than a church of any denomination. Let us have more parks and we shall need less police.

E. G. Hill's paper on "An American Type of Roses" was worthy of the man, and that's saying enough. And the questions fired at him showed an interest in this great subject. Mr. Hill is an explorer in American horticulture, an American Vilmorin, and that grey head of his does a lot of thinking.



We greatly enjoyed Mr. Vaughan's idea of the "Ideal Employe." It was lively and most attractively delivered and his version of an ideal employe is greatly to be desired, for he certainly would be ideal. Such an entertaining debate followed that we refrained from raising our weak voice.

There is a large measure of truth in the opinion of many that the conduct of an employe is moulded somewhat by the character and treatment of the employer. But that only goes so far. If all employes were turned out of one mould it would be easy to control, elevate and bring them to the ideal, as you can a steam pump or gas engine. How different is the human animal! Characters differ as widely as the poles. If we were all saints what a humdrum world this would be. If there was no room on top for the bright, industrious man of integrity, there would be no ambition. We must have the sloven as well as the worker, sin as well as virtue, sorrow as well as joy, pain as well as pleasure, and if we were all ideal, the world of men and women would vanish. Next year's essay on "The Ideal Employer" will be worth a long journey to hear, especially if assigned to the Reverend Dr. Carmody. The employer is in a higher position than the employe and his responsibilities are far greater and his influence toward a good understanding between himself and employe rests mostly on employer.

That story of Mr. O'Mara's illustrating the speed of the Chicago business man must be heard to be relished. "Go slowly," said the slowly swinging pendulum of the south. "Plenty of time," spoke the shorter pendulum further north, but the lively timepiece of Chicago said, "Get there, get there, get there, get there," at 300 beats to the minute.

Friday morning exercises were very pleasant and the talks by so-called foreigners were highly interesting. Mr. Brown, of London, over on the banks of the Clyde, was inspiring and his style of man is raising our profession to a higher plane. The gentleman from Winnipeg told us how in a few years a flat, treeless prairie with less than three feet elevation in five miles has now picturesque parks, shaded streets and all that makes our older cities such pleasant places in which to dwell. I don't like to hear men who hold their knife and fork as we do, and speak the same language, be called foreigners. I would like to say, as did the immortal Tom Paine, "The world is my country and humanity my religion."

Mr. Carmody presented the remembrance of the society to the president in his matchless method. No one can raise the emotions finer than the man from Posie county, and if Mr. Breitmeyer had thanked us in flowing language, we should not have believed it had touched his heart. His heart was in his throat. He almost choked, uttered a few words of gratitude and subsided and we truly believe never was his heart fuller than at that moment, except perhaps at that hushed time a few years back when the present Mrs. Breitmeyer fell on his manly chest and lisped in accents low and sweet, "Phil, I am yours." Pull down the curtain, only a few of us have that experience more than once.

The election was lively and a friendly contest does no harm. It brings out the attendance and there is enough of the old Adam left in all of us to enjoy competition. For president and secretary it was by no means a walkover. The sharp and close election for secretary was a shake-up and the waves caused by the eruption will flow outwards and have their beneficial effect. No one's face was more radiant after the election than broad-minded John F. Sullivan. The society honored itself in the re-election of Mr. Beatty and the Washington boys did nobly in selecting sturdy, manly J. R. Freeman.

The sporting element was conspicuous throughout, but interfered not in the slightest with the legitimate business of the convention and to get a good crowd together is as much an essential as any part of the performance. Many good fellows are enthusiasts at bowling, but there are two men indispensable to make it good and jolly, viz., John Westcott and Phil Hauswirth. The latter's service to the Bowling League was most properly acknowledged and if utter exhaustion did follow his all-day exertions on Wednesday, he came up as bright as the evening star by Friday morning. As for John, of Philadelphia, his delight is to see others enjoy the game and have a good time generally.

cup are in their keeping for the year. Let them pat them and kiss them and fondle them, for at Washington next August they will be sorrowfully compelled to say, "Bye-bye, you beauties."

Age does not interfere with the art of bowling, as is proved by the presence of a China clock just arrived from St. Louis and now situated near our front door, too handy, rather, for "the missus" to see the time of night as she opens the door for us. All will return home with pleasant recollections of the bowling tournament and many with something more substantial than memories.

The shooting was ably conducted by Mr. Tesson. Unfortunately a Chicago gentleman had so many pleasant things to say to us at the hotel after the business session, we could not get to the shooting either in time or condition.

Mr. Altick again demonstrated that he is not only a first-class member of the more serious side of our meetings but can shoot like a Boer.

Our opinion is that the attendance at the convention and at the opening session, as well as the other meetings, was not equal to several conventions which we could mention. Many eastern faces were missing. Fear of oppressive heat and the intention to visit the World's Fair in October or November were the principal causes.

The trade exhibit has also been larger on previous occasions, yet it was large, well managed and all in order at an early hour. Every requisite of our business was well represented. I am going to take the liberty to mention but a few. There were splendid assortments of palms from Philadelphia, ribbons in color and texture that would charm a grass widow, bulbs from everywhere, baskets that were charming, bells that were beauties and a host of other plants, requisites, vases, boilers, model greenhouses, etc.

Three ferns deserve especial mention, for ferns now enter largely into our Building Material Exhibits at the St. Louis Convention.

How good of Philadelphia, Buffalo, St. Louis, New York, Cleveland and the other cities to either send their weakest team or no team at all and let Chicago have the principal prizes. They have struggled hard for ten years and have landed at last. The magnificent Kasting challenge trophy and the splendid Beatty business. Adiantum Croweanum was shown by W. F. Kasting. For cut fronds this must be the adiantum of the future. Distinct from all of its type, its length of stem, size of frond and keeping qualities leave it without a rival. The Tarrytown fern, a sport of Piersoni, is quite distinct from the former. Whatever its commercial value may be, we cannot foretell, but for a beautiful specimen, where ferns are admired, this will take a foremost seat. It can be classed as a filmy fern, as beautiful as the famous Killarney fern.

And lastly, but not leastly, we come to that really wonderful display of Nephrolepis Scottii, from John Scott, of Brooklyn. Of the many forms of N. exaltata this has every promise of superseding the good old Boston form. Just as graceful, but more dense in growth, marvelously quick to make a fine plant and yet a small plant in a 3-inch pot is a specimen. We think it by far the most valuable commercial fern that has appeared since the advent of the Boston variety.

That visit to the Missouri Botanic Garden and the courtesy extended to us by Prof. Trelease was most enjoyable and we hope all intelligent visitors to the World's Fair will not miss Shaw's Garden and see how horticulture should be carried out in its ornamental direction.

We did not take in the world's largest brewery. Don't care for such things, yet saw many take the cars for that mammoth irrigation plant and must vouch for the fact that on their return there was little alteration in color of countenance or demeanor.

The World's Fair, brother florists who did not see it, is stupendous. It seems impossible that any bigger or grander can be conceived or carried out by man and if it could be bigger, it is certainly not desirable. Everyone goes there more or less interested in his own particular line or fancy, some to study art or architecture, some to look mostly at clocks or carpets, others to look at engines of power or destruction. Florists go there to admire ornamental gardening, and that is the weakest part of this marvelous show. The sunken gardens are beautiful, particularly when not too closely inspected. The stiff little edge of African tamarix surrounding each bed is new, unique and excellent in effect. It outlines the designs admirably. The sloping lawn and flower gardening falling away from the summit of the cascades is grand, and who on earth, at this day or any other, has ever seen such an imposing or magnificent sight as these cascades. The long rows of fine maple trees on each side of the central lagoon is a mistake. They largely obscure from sight the splendors of the cascades. If they were removed to the grass borders near the gigantic buildings they would give a clear view of the crowning glory of the exposition and much improve the buildings.

The bare white walls of these many twenty-acre buildings tire you, unrelieved as they are without a leaf of greenery of any kind. Frederic W. Taylor, chief of agriculture and horticulture, has filled his gigantic buildings splendidly with the products of farm and orchard. The ornamental division of horticulture, in charge of Mr. Hadkinson, superintendent of floriculture, had crushing obstacles to overcome, but he has mastered them and the surroundings of the Agriculture and Horticulture buildings are now brilliant with cannas and other summer bedding plants. Stupendous as is the extent of the fair and its still more marvelous buildings, there is an impression forced on you that if it were half the size it would be far more beautiful, or could be made so. Go and see it. It is wonderful, even if it is overgrown.

Let us all busy ourselves to get that sum of $10,000 together to perpetuate the care of the ground surrounding the monument of Wm. McKinley. It's a chance that many a trade or profession would be glad of. It was eloquently set forth by Mr. Altick, of Dayton. It takes but a trifle from each and we shall ever be remembered.

In conclusion, Mr. Editor, I have tried to be serious in these rambling notes, although there were plenty of jokes, anecdotes and laughable incidents in the course of this enjoyable convention. There is only one I remember at this moment, and it illustrates the necessity of a knowledge of church etiquette. It appears that Mr. Ringier, of Chicago, with a friend, having no other place to go Sunday before the convention, entered an Episcopal church. A vestryman handed him a beautifully bound prayer book. Mr. R. thanked him and put it in his pocket, and the same afternoon dispatched it to Chicago as a souvenir of St. Louis to his wife. Later he was notified that the good book was only for his use during service. The book was returned from Chicago and all is well.

St. Louis boys one and all without distinction, you worked hard. You did well and succeeded in making the convention one long to be remembered with pleasure. We thank you all.

William Scott.

CONVENTION NOTES.

In his address President Breitmeyer deplored the fact that discussion had been more and more limited at recent conventions. It must have been a pleasure to him that the debates on the affairs of the society and the discussions on the essays were never more animated than at St. Louis. Little was left to be desired in this direction.

The heavy rains were too much for the roof of the exhibition hall. The leaks did considerable damage to S. S. Pennock's ribbon display.

Souvenirs were plentiful. Pennock distributed pencils, Moninger had match safes. Herenden paper weights, Reed & Keller a card with a girl dressed in a skirt like a folding Christmas bell, and there were many more.

G. M. Kellogg said that tobacco stems are hard to get since the trust bought up all the cigar shops and he put a question in the box as to the best substitute for use in fumigating. Several members related varying experiences in the use of nicotine extracts and J. T. D. Fulmer said that the tops of cannas cut off in the fall and dried had proved a satisfactory fumigant.

Albert M. Herr noted the absence of those recognized as carnation growers and put this question in the box: "Would it be advisable to change the date of meeting to suit the convenience of carnation growers, August being one of their busiest months?" Opinion was unanimous that it wouldn't.

The inscription under the group photograph in last week's issue, "The Men Who Made the Convention," was a typographical error. It should have been "The Men Who Made the Exhibition," but it wasn't so far wrong, after all, considering the important factor the trade display has been in recent years.

Among the cannas at the World's Fair, Jean Tissot, exhibited by Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia, attracts instant attention. It is a dark foliaged sort, of rather less than medium height, the flower of a brilliant scarlet crimson, and habit excellent. It seems to be a real advance in this important class.

In the Horticulture building at the Fair the only important cut flower display during convention week was that of Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y., whose collection of gladioli was a revelation to the visitors.

The St. Louis florists are entitled to much credit for the admirable arrangements made for the meeting and the comfort of the visitors. The only St. Louisan who failed to do his duty was the weather man.

The convention souvenir, prepared under the direction of J. J. Beneke, was a remarkably handsome example of fine printing as well as a compendium of useful information.

The glass mending device shown by the C. C. Pollworth Co. promises to be useful. They have patented it.

Nearly all the exhibits were sold to local florists.

HAIL ASSOCIATION.

At a meeting of the directors of the Florists' Hail Association at St. Louis last week, E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind., was elected president, H. H. Ritter vice-president, J. G. Esler secretary and A. M. Herr treasurer. The directors elected were J. T. Temple, J. F. Wilcox and J. C. Vaughan.

JOSEPH R. FREEMAN.

Joseph R. Freeman, of Washington, D. C., arrived in America July 28, 1868, after nearly five years of apprenticeship under the celebrated Michael Saul, fruit specialist and writer for Gardeners' Chronicle, of London, England. He at once took charge as greenhouse foreman at the establishment of the late John Saul, where he stayed until September, 1872. He was then at the U. S. Agricultural Department for about two years, superintendent of the beautiful Oak Hill cemetery for a term of years, under the late W. H. Saunders, and late of Bonnie Brae cemetery, in Baltimore County, Maryland, leaving the latter place in 1880 to start in business in Washington, D. C., where he is now located. He has quite extensive greenhouses, where both plants and cut flowers are grown, and conducts a retail cut flower and plant business at 612 Thirteenth street N. W., where many florists who attended the Washington convention of the S. A. F. had the pleasure of seeing him, and no doubt carried with them pleasant recollections of their visits. Mr. Freeman is now 54 years of age and is still able to put characteristic energy into anything he undertakes, is well known by the general public in his adopted city and is particularly proud of the good will of the members of the Washington Florists' Club, whose president he has been for two terms. He is naturally averse to office-holding and needed some persuasion to allow his name to be used at St. Louis, where he was elected vice-president of the S. A. F.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENT.

BY JOHN A. PETTIGREW, BOSTON, MASS.

[Read before the Society of American Florists at St. Louis, August 18, 1904.]

Looking at Central park, New York, as it is today, and taking into consideration the fact that the first steps to condemn the land for park purposes were taken in 1853, we cannot fail to be impressed with the immense advantage that has accrued to the city in the short space of fifty-one years, and with the truth that horticulture plays a very important part in the civic economy of the United States.

In 1882 the New York Park Association (formed because of the apathy of New York in a work of such importance) appointed a committee to endeavor to secure an extension of New York's park area. This committee published a report showing the immense pecuniary returns to the city in twenty-five years by the construction of Central park. To quote from the report:

Parks Affect Values.

The cost of the land taken for the Central park was $6,666,381, to which must be added $9,873,844 for construction, $6,500,000 for maintenance, and $20,753,925 for twenty-five years' interest on the Park Assessment and Improvement Bonds, making a total cost of $43,794,150. Large as this amount appears and undoubtedly is, it is comparatively insignificant in view of the enormous benefit which resulted financially to the city from the improvement. The amount collected in twenty-five years on the property of the three wards named (the wards contiguous to Central park) over and above the ordinary increase on the tax value of real estate in the rest of the city, was $65,000,000, or about $21,000,000 more than the aggregate expense attending and following the establishment of the park up to the present year. Regarding the whole transaction in the light of a real estate speculation alone, the city has $21,000,000 in cash over and above the outlay, and acquired in addition thereto, land valued at $200,000,000.

The above statement shows the influence Central park had on the value of contiguous property up to 1881. The enormous value of the same property at the present day, in comparison with real estate further removed from Central park, shows the continued influence of public parks on the value of adjoining property. Quoting again from the New York Park Association report:

The case of Chicago presents still stronger and more conclusive testimony. In a letter to the secretary of the New York Park Association, Mr. W. H. Harmon, secretary of the Chicago park department, responds as follows to a question as to what has been the effect of parks upon the value of adjacent land: "The immediate effect was to double and quadruple property."

That the establishment of park areas has invariably enhanced the real estate value of contiguous property has been the experience also of other cities. The commissioners of the Boston park department, in their report for the year 1896, page 63, referring to the increased value of lands surrounding park areas, say:

With regard to the influence of public parks on the neighboring real estate, no recent figures have been made. In 1890 the board published a statement of the increase in value of the Back Bay lands since the establishment of the park. By this table it will be found that the land alone was trebled in value in thirteen years, while the valuation of land in the rest of the city during the same period increased only 18 per cent. The increased taxes on this land, without including the buildings erected, aggregated over $2,000,000—a sum more than sufficient to pay the entire cost of the improvement at that time. The increased taxes on new buildings erected on these lands yielded $1,500,000 more of revenue. While the increase in the value of the lands adjoining other parks of the city has not shown a like phenomenal growth, present indications point to a largely increased revenue from this cause in the future, which may justify the opinion expressed in the earliest report of the board that the establishment of public parks will have the tendency to lessen the rate of taxation instead of increasing it. The cost of the land taken for the Back Bay Fens averaged about 12 cents per foot; the cost of improving the site brings the present cost of the land up to 52 cents per square foot, while the adjoining land is selling at $3 to $5 per foot, although the growth of the city has not as yet brought very much of it into the market. The cost of Franklin park land averaged about 7 cents per foot and the cost of improvement about an equal amount, or a total of 15 cents per foot, which is a moderate valuation for this magnificent property, where land adjoining will bring from 50 cents to $1 per foot. The same result is shown in the case of the whole park system, the average cost of which today is only 6 cents per foot for the land and about 8 cents per foot for improvements.

This experience, which was common to all cities in which parks had been constructed, accentuated the park movement until we find that up to the year 1901 (according to the report of the park census committee of the Park and Outdoor Art Association) there were purchased, or otherwise acquired, and dedicated to public use approximately 75,000 acres of land, apart from United States government reservations, and that approximately there are being spent annually, in the towns and cities of the United States $11,000,000 for park improvement and maintenance.

Motives of Promoters.

Various motives have governed the promoters of the park movement, but the prevailing motive was primarily to introduce rural landscapes into cities and towns. When cities were not so large or so densely populated they were more rural in character, and satisfied public requirements in this respect; but, as population increased, the villas and cottages, with their accompanying grounds and gardens, gave place to bricks and mortar piled up in closely-built blocks, and the woods and fields, so eagerly yearned for by the city dwellers, became more and more remote with each year. The park movement, therefore, was born of necessity; the physical well-being, comfort and health of the public demanded that open spaces should be provided convenient for public use.

Horticulture, too, is one of the most important factors in street adornment. Imagine the effect of the removal of the trees from an old-fashioned village street. How unpicturesque would become the irregularly placed houses! How uninviting and inhospitable would be the home yard without the old-fashioned flowers bordering the walk, or without the vines over the porch door and the overhanging branches of the shade trees nearby! The early settlers in the eastern states recognized this fact, and, invariably, after finishing the building of their houses, no matter how unpretentious the houses were, planted trees in the street or road in front, and, if means allowed, extended the planting to the boundaries of their estates. To these early settlers the wayfarer of the present day is indebted for the grand old elms which are to be found in the New England towns and villages. Ancient clumps of the common lilac, eglantine or bouncing bet, planted by the same hands, add an interest to many an old homestead.

Desirability of Tree Planting.

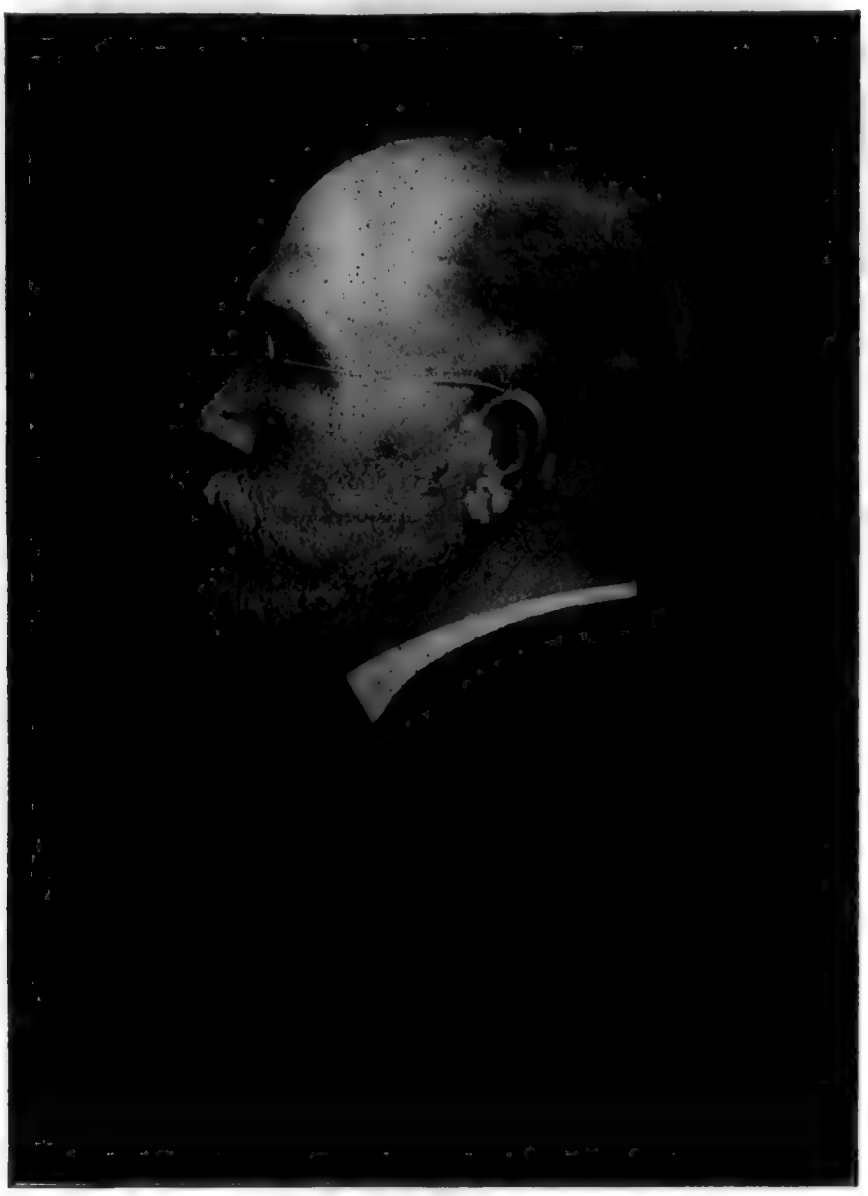
The desirability of tree planting in streets is so great that it may be classed as one of the most important of civic duties. Nothing impresses the visitor in a city more than the air of comfort apparent in well-planted streets. It matters little how imposing or ambitious the architecture on a street may be, unless its lines are softened by the foliage of trees and vines, it seems devoid of artistic taste, and is barren and inhospitable to the eye. On the contrary, a street may be humble in its architectural pretentions, yet, if clothed with foliage, every dwelling seems framed in contentment and restful peace.

Trees also ameliorate the heated conditions of summer temperature, not only by the grateful shade they afford the city dweller, but also by the large amount of moisture they draw from the ground and evaporate into the atmosphere. They are also good sanitary agents. They absorb stagnant water through their roots, and exhale from their leaves life-giving oxygen. The value of trees from a sanitary point of view is illustrated by the action of the New York Medical Society, which passed the resolution "That one of the most effective means for mitigating the intense heat of the summer months and diminishing the death rate among children is the cultivation of an adequate number of trees in the streets." This is further emphasized by the fact that the bill presented to the legislature of New York, asking that the street trees of New York be placed in the care of the park commissioners, was drawn by a physician, a member of the State Board of Health, and was introduced merely as a sanitary measure.

Trees, too, have an educational value, not only as object lessons close at hand for nature study, but also by instilling into the youthful mind an early love for the beautiful in nature. For the great majority of city dwellers, and for the greater part of their lives, the street trees are the only bits of sylvan beauty available for them to enjoy; the parks, or the country, usually are not convenient for a visit oftener than once a week at most.

For these reasons, beneficial as are parks for the people, it would seem to be of infinitely more importance to the well-being of dwellers in large cities and towns were it imposed as a civic obligation that, wherever possible, streets should be planted with trees, and their maintenance provided for; and, further, that, in the laying out of new streets, a suitable space be set apart for the growth of trees. The question of cost of so beautifying the streets is insignificant as compared with the benefits gained. Trees are endowed with a good deal of hardihood, as is evident in the streets of our cities. Year after year they put forth their leaves, in spite of the gnawing of horses, the ravages of insects and the mutilation of their roots and branches; their wants are simple and can be inexpensively satisfied.

Even from a financial point of view, the systematic planting and care of trees in city streets would prove a paying investment. Newcomers are not attracted to a city by garish, shadeless streets any more than they are by dirty or poorly paved streets, unsanitary conditions, or any other form of slovenly civic housekeeping.



Within the past few years various methods have been employed to induce street planting. Societies and clubs, by example and advice, have done much good. In a few cities the work has been placed in charge of the government. Nowhere, however, has the importance of the subject been thoroughly grasped, except, probably, in the city of Washington, where a systematic plan of street planting was adopted about thirty years ago, and the result for good is very apparent today.

It is quite evident that a work of this kind should not be left, in its execution, to the fancy of the individual resident. The average citizen usually is entirely ignorant of tree planting culture, or the kinds of trees that should be used, the result in a street planted by individual effort being, as Professor Waugh, of Amherst College, aptly puts it "like two rows of odd buttons down the front of a frock coat."

The requirements for properly planting a street, are, the furnishing of proper conditions in soil and location for growth, harmony in effect and the providing of means for doing the work and for subsequent care. These requirements could be most efficiently controlled by the central government, aided by competent executive officers.

Planting School Grounds.

It is pleasing to note that an interest is developing in the planting of schoolhouse grounds. In the town of Brookline, Mass., beautiful effects have been produced by the planting of masses of shrubbery against the boundary fences of the school yards, and at the fronts of the buildings, the open spaces being turfed. Trees have also been planted to shade the sidewalks, and creepers planted against the walls of the school buildings. Due regard has been paid, also, to space for playground requirements. The city of Boston, also, during the past season, planted trees and shrubbery in the grounds of seven of its new schools.

John A. Pettigrew.

This is a step in the right direction, and is a striking contrast to the uninviting exteriors of the generality of the old school buildings. Pupils of the schools so adorned cannot but be benefited by the influence of nature so attractively and constantly set before their eyes. Now that nature studies have become a part of the curriculum of almost every school, the planting of trees, shrubs and flowers in the school grounds gives material close at hand for practical demonstrations, and for identification and botanical study; but, pre-eminently, calling in the aid of horticulture makes the schoolhouse and grounds homelike and attractive, awakening in the children an interest in nature at a time when the mind is receptive of artistic influences.

Realizing the importance of horticulture in its relation to the education of children, the Civic League of Boston, three years ago, appointed a committee to establish school gardens. The work has proved interesting and successful, the children striving to outdo each other in the care of their plots.

On Home Grounds.

Horticulture should have an important part in the home life. In England, the cultivation of flowers is almost universal among the cottagers. Little unkempt or waste land is found there around the homes of the working people. Vegetables, flowers and shrubs are planted, and the workman hurries from his daily employment to his labor of love, the garden. Houses are often embowered in roses or other climbing plants, which contribute greatly to the charming effect of English villages, often noted by travelers. It is to be regretted that such enthusiasm in the cultivation of home gardens does not obtain here. The work of improvement associations and kindred societies, however, is doing much to arouse interest in this direction, and it is to be hoped that the day is not far distant when every occupier of a house will plant and beautify the grounds. There is no home so humble but can be made more cheerful by the cultivation of a few plants. A window-box of nasturtiums, if nothing else, on the outside, has its influence for good on the dweller in the tenement. Nowhere do flowers grow so near the heart as at home, and how many men and women carry with them through life the refining influences of the flowers, which, in their youth, beautified the home garden!

Boston's Playgrounds.

A natural step following the establishment of parks in cities was the setting apart of playground areas. While playgrounds were to be found in most of the large parks, it was found that, in parks of small size, ornamental planting and ball playing did not consort well together. Large parks were few and far between. The growth of the city covered, year by year, the vacant ground hitherto available for play. It became, therefore, necessary that playgrounds should be provided for boys and young men. In the last few years this movement has been very active. Boston, outside of its larger parks, has twenty-one playgrounds in use under the control of the park department. These playgrounds range from one-half of an acre to seventy-four acres. Many of these playgrounds contain corners for children, where apparatus is provided for their use and where female teachers are in charge. In one of the playgrounds the Civic League has introduced children's gardens with great success. The gardens are on the tree border, which surrounds two sides of the playground, and are fenced off from the general playground and flying balls by high, woven, wire fencing. A low fence is on the street side. The gardens are about eight feet by three feet, and number about 200. Great interest is manifested by the children in their little plots, and large quantities of flowers and vegetables are raised, under the direction of teachers, by the little gardeners, who are proud to be able to take home substantial evidences of their skill and industry. As an instance of the success of the scheme it may be mentioned that 880 ears of sweet corn have been gathered to date, this season. This playground is in a thickly populated district which the police department maintains has been much benefited by its establishment. So far as is practicable, without interfering with their use for play, all Boston's playgrounds are ornamented with trees, and, in some cases, with shrubbery. One of Cambridge's largest playgrounds is beautifully bordered with masses of trees and shrubbery.

Thus we see that horticulture occupies an important position in city and home life. Its possibilities of larger adaptation and development are very great in its relation to the health, comfort and general well-being of the people, especially, as said before, in its application to street adornment; and no more important field of labor can be found for this society than to use its influence energetically for the provision for trees in the streets and waysides. This work is entirely within the scope of the society's aims. It is one covering the interests of humanity in general, and is well worthy of the best efforts of the society toward its accomplishment.

ROSES.

Training, Disbudding and Cultivating.

The work mostly needing attending to during the next week or two will be training, disbudding and cultivating. At this season, when the plants should be growing vigorously, there should be no delay or neglect in this work.

By keeping the shoots in proper position, syringing can be more effectively done and freer circulation of air among the leaves can be obtained, while if the shoots are left to trail on the ground they will, by reason of the exclusion of light and sunshine, be sure to make weak eyes, which will make weak, strawy wood, which, in turn, will form eyes from which nothing can be expected but blind wood.

This is especially the case with such varieties as Bride and Bridesmaid and will eventually necessitate a cutting or thinning out of such rubbish, whereas, by careful training every leaf can be preserved and made to perform its part in the encouragement of more vigorous root action, development and maturing of eyes fit to produce strong flower bearing stems.

Some varieties, such as Liberty and Kaiserin, which have a tendency to produce strong canes and a consequent smaller crop of side wood, do not require so much attention and care in this respect, while such varieties as Golden Gate and Ivory, which in their earlier stages naturally incline to the production of heavy crops of small wood, should have a judicious thinning out as soon as the stronger canes begin to appear, thus affording a greater amount of sunlight and a freer circulation of air to strengthen the stems and develop the flower buds.

Those plants which are bearing or are in preparation for a first cut should have the laterals removed while they are in a soft state, as, if they are allowed to remain on the stem until they become hard and require a knife for their removal, they will by that time have used so much of the nutriment which ought to have been diverted to the bud that the flowers will be likely to be either small, crippled or off-color, while the stem will have lost its symmetry and gracefulness.

Varieties like Meteor and Kaiserin, which are inclined to produce their flowers in clusters of three or more, should have the smaller buds removed so that the strength of the stem may be concentrated in the remaining bud. Perle, which also has this tendency, requires more judicious handling, it being often necessary, where the plants are extra strong, to remove the crown bud and allow one of the lateral buds to develop in order to prevent a crop of bull-heads, it being sometimes even profitable to shorten the stronger canes by at least one-third when this tendency is very decided.

Beauties, by reason of their quick, succulent growth and heavy foliage, which if left uncared for in respect to training are more likely to suffer from the force of the syringe than the smaller kinds of roses, should receive particular care, for if unsupported it is very difficult to get the spray of water to touch the under sides of the leaves and that is just where the spider chooses to make his abode.

FEEDING.

The early planted stock is now in a condition where a judicious use of stimulant in a liquid form is of great benefit. Weak doses should, of course, be given at first, until the plants are used to it, and, while it may take more time, it will be found that several weak applications are far to be preferred to one strong one. A strong solution of any fertilizer, particularly the chemical salts, will destroy the delicate root hairs of the plant and before new ones can form the benefit that should have been derived from that application is largely lost. We must always remember that any nourishment applied to a plant must be assimilated through these minute rootlets before it can benefit the plant and, such being the case, the importance of preserving every root intact is evident.

Liquid fertilizer made from the excrement of cows or sheep I always considered of most value for feeding chrysanthemums. These may be most easily prepared by soaking in a barrel of water, putting the manure into a sack for the purpose of keeping the liquid free from lumps, which would otherwise clog up the can or hose in watering. We like to draw the liquid out of the barrel with a Kinney pump; then, while it may be very strong in the barrel, it will be well diluted after passing through the pump.

Soot water is an excellent stimulant. Soot may be scattered on the soil and watered in, or placed in a sack and soaked in water. Its effect will be noticed on the foliage in a few days, as it imparts a dark, healthy gloss to the leaves. Many of the famous exhibitors use Clay's fertilizer and ichthemic guano but they are rather too expensive for general use, though their great value has been repeatedly proven.

In chemical fertilizers, nitrate of soda is perhaps most generally used, though my own experience prompts me to recommend sulphate of ammonia in preference to it. Nitrate of potash is also quite largely used and, as this is supposed to supply both nitrogen and potash, it is of most value. Nitrate of potash gives a wonderful size and color to the foliage and stiffens the stems, but all these chemicals, unless used with discretion, tend to make the flower soft and flabby. A safe application to use on the plants, is at the rate of one ounce of chemical to four gallons of water, using it a little weaker than that for a first dose and gradually increasing in strength. The chrysanthemum is a gross feeder and will stand more feeding than any plant I know of, provided it is done at the proper time, which is when the soil is full of roots.

But a word of caution must be given. If I could give the reader an exact formula and tell him just how and when to apply it, all would be plain sailing, but this is impossible, as so many things have to be considered. If the plants are generally soft, quick grown and lacking in what I will for want of a better word call "stamina," they will not stand nearly so much feeding as harder, more solid growth. Where the stem of the plant is losing its green look, and bark is forming, with a close-jointed, firm growth all through the bed, it may be assumed that those plants will stand feeding and lots of it at this time. If the foliage is very brittle, black green in color and curling up, the plants are getting more food than they can assimilate and feeding should be very light or discontinued altogether for a time.

Personal experience is the best guide, in fact, the only guide a man can safely follow in feeding his plants. When the buds are swelling up and you find here and there through the bench a bud that looks as though it has been severed half way through the stem with a knife, it is a danger signal to stop feeding. This beheading of the bud is caused by the fact that the roots are pumping up more food than the bud can use and nature steps in and by this method cuts off some of the supply. This trouble never occurs when the later September bud is taken, but is by no means unusual when an August crown bud is used.

Plants in pots or boxes will stand much more feeding than plants in a bench because their root area is restricted and there is much less soil for the plant to feed on. Use common sense and if you err at all it is better to err on the side of underfeeding. You will then at least have the satisfaction of not having your flowers spoiled and useless.

A MODERN PLANT.

The accompanying illustrations show the first block of greenhouses erected for the United States Cut Flower Company at Elmira, N. Y. This consists of 100,000 feet and is the first block of a contemplated million feet. The plans, material and heating designs are by the King Construction Co., of North Tonawanda, and include all their latest improvements in greenhouse construction, many of which will be put into use here for the first time.

The first consideration being the elimination of shadows, they have designed this structure especially with this end in view and by the substitution of truss work to support the roofs instead of the ordinary posts for purlin and ridge pole supports, they have succeeded admirably. The gutters are of iron, and iron and steel has been used entirely for the frame work, which is bound together by the use of tie rods and turn buckles. The supports are placed on cement foundations and for durability and strength are beyond question. The drainage system, which is covered by patents granted to R. W. King, is the most perfect in existence and is carefully guarded by the company. The ventilating system possesses all the latest improvements, including the patent spring connections which entirely do away with the straining and twisting due to ice or snow, the steady pull of the spring preventing the sash from warping.

The plant will be heated by steam and will embrace some of the newest features in that science. The boilers are being installed with a view to using the automatic stokers and will be fitted with the latest designs for economizing fuel.

The benches are built of cement with tile bottoms and are practically indestructible. Twelve of the houses are planted to roses, which will be made a specialty, the remainder being devoted to carnations, lilies, etc.

The company has purchased sixty-two acres of land and located here by reason of the many advantages to be derived from soil, climate and shipping facilities which are "second to none."

THE EXPERIENCE OF SIMON.

A Business Parody.

Simon was a simple, country lad, who lived with his parents near the city of X. When Simon was sixteen his family moved to a small farm on which there was a greenhouse. This greenhouse Simon's father told his son should be his to do with as he liked. Visions of wealth floated through Simon's mind and he went to work in earnest, spending all his spare time putting the house in order, carpentering, glazing, painting until all was in readiness for soil and plants.

What to grow was now the question. Simon subscribed to the REVIEW and consulted William Scott. That week the great William was for mignonette. So lucidly and glowingly was its culture described that Simon at once decided that he would grow mignonette, and nothing but mignonette, in his new house. The soil was wheeled into the ground bed, the manure added, the seed purchased and sown and in due time the young plants appeared. Then came thinning, pinching, supporting and feeding. Simon must have had ability, for the first crop in his little house was as pretty a sight as one could wish to see. There were between 500 and 600 great spikes of bloom, all borne erect on straight, long stems and not a poor flower among them.

Simon again consulted the REVIEW. The price given in X for mignonette was, ordinary, $1 to $2 per hundred; fancy, $3 per hundred.

"Mine are fancies, and I shall have $15 this week, when my first crop is harvested," Simon thought.

That night at supper Simon asked his father who would be the best florist to see about his mignonettes.

"You might try Freddie Cattleya," his father said, "they say he's struck a mine."

Simon did not know what a florist had to do with a mine, but he called on Mr. Cattleya after school next day.

Mr. Cattleya's shop seemed to Simon the most beautiful place he had ever seen. It was dusk when he reached there. The electric lights were reflected and multiplied by the long mirrors on every side, making the fine flowers that stood in jars everywhere look most inviting. Simon was unhappily conscious of dust on his shoes and looked about for Mr. Cattleya. Everyone seemed to be in a rush, making bouquets, filling or taking out orders, and no one appeared to pay any attention to Simon. He was just thinking he had better come another time when an attractive young man came toward him quickly with, "Well, my lad, do you want me?" Simon mustered up courage and told Mr. Cattleya, for it was he, about his 500 mignonette.

"Bring me a bunch tomorrow morning early; mind it be early," and with a pink in his buttonhole Simon found himself in the street so happy he scarce knew how.

He was up at 5 o'clock the next morning, picked his bunch of twenty-five mignonette and by 7 was at Mr. Cattleya's shop. It was very quiet now. Simon was directed to a back room where Mr. Cattleya was giving orders to several men. As soon as he saw Simon he greeted him kindly and Simon produced his mignonette. Mr. Cattleya asked the price.

Simon said it was 3 cents.

"It would be worth 3 cents," Mr. Cattleya said, "if the heads were all similar. This one is perfect, but this one, and this one, have a little more green than white and the bronze is irregular, a serious defect." "Is not that true, Peter?" "Yes, Mr. Cattleya."

Simon was dumbfounded; he thought his mignonette was perfect and now he saw his mistake. Simon was about to roll up his mignonette and depart when the pleasant-looking young man who had been addressed as Peter offered him a bright half-dollar, saying, "Mr. Cattleya will give you 2 cents for the bunch."

Simon clutched the half-dollar and ran out precipitately. He reached school in time, but he was floored in every recitation. "His mignonette was not even; the coloring was irregular; it was 'ordinary.'" His pride was hurt. That was the worst of it. The fact that his hoped for $15 would become only $10 was of secondary importance.

At supper that night a friend of his father's was telling of some flowers he had bought that day. "I wanted a fancy article and Freddie Cattleya showed me a find, the best mignonette I ever saw. Could only let me have a dozen; they came pretty steep, too."

"Was it your mignonette, Simon?" his father asked.

"No, mine is only 'ordinary.'"

His food choked him and he went out. But, being a brave lad, he determined to have one more try. He knew a big store in X where he would take his mignonette.

The next morning Simon cut another bunch, getting every flower with the green and white even and bronze in proper proportion. Perhaps Mr. Cattleya was wrong; he would see.

Simon went to a great store on the fashionable street of X. A magnificent show window occupied the entire front. Underneath was the name, "Rambler Sisters, Florists." It was an old firm, the founders having retired some time since. On learning his business the colored boy at the door told Simon to go to the back entrance. He found a young Mr. Rambler, a relative of the founders, who received him kindly.

"Your mignonette is fine," he said. "How much?"

Simon said it was worth 3 cents.

"We are not paying over 2 cents," Mr. Rambler said. "Can you give us some at that price?"

Simon told him he would see, and went out.

On the street a fakir offered him a quarter for his bunch, which he had forgotten to wrap. Simon humbly accepted the quarter. Mr. Cattleya was right, his mignonette was "ordinary."

Simon slept badly that night. He was up in the morning to air and water his beloved mignonette. Just as he finished a telegraph boy came into the greenhouse. Simon had never received a telegram in his life. He tore it open. It read as follows:

"Send fifty mignonettes daily.—Rambler Sisters."

Hardly had Simon read the slip when a large, four-horse van drove up. It was most striking in appearance. Across the side in golden scrip was "Francis Frederick Cattleya, Florist. Simple flowers tastefully grouped."

A bright-looking boy in gray livery, with "Cattleya" on his cap, jumped down from beside the driver and presented Simon with a letter. It was addressed to Mr. Simon Mardner and read as follows:

"Dear Sir:—Give bearer 250 mignonette. Reserve the balance until next week. Yours truly, F. F. Cattleya."

Simon was puzzled and stood staring first at one boy and then at the other for a full minute. Then a resolute look came into his face as he pulled out his knife and turned to his beloved mignonette.

But, putting his knife back into his pocket, Simon dismissed both boys, one bearing a telegram declining with regret, the other a letter to the same effect.

That afternoon Simon promised all his mignonette to a wholesale house in X.

Here are the slips for the week, added:

550 mignonette	$33.00
Com.	4.95
Check inclosed	$28.05

"Mine were fancy," thought Simon.

CARNATIONS

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Light, Air and Water.

After the plants have been in the house five or six weeks and they have taken a good hold of the soil, you should do all you can to induce them to make a strong, sturdy growth. For at least two months yet we will have at our disposal an abundance of the three elements which the carnation enjoys above all else. These three are sunshine, fresh air and water. The three go hand in hand. To deprive the carnation plants of either will mean failure, which is only aggravated if the other two be increased. Where one of the three is lacking the remaining two must be curtailed in proportion, but when all three are at hand in abundance it is difficult to overdo either one.

The one over which we have the least control and the one that gives us the most trouble is the sunshine. We can, most of the time, control ventilation and we can always control the supply of water. So the growers' task is simply to regulate the supply of water and ventilation according to the amount of sunshine which is to be had. While the days are warm and bright there is no danger of too much ventilation and the danger of overwatering is slight, after the plants get into a vigorous growth.

There should be no shade whatever on the glass, else the growth will come soft, which is a condition always to be avoided. When you water do it copiously and then let the soil get into proper condition before watering again. By stirring the surface occasionally you can prevent the soil from souring until the roots work through it, after which time the danger of souring is lessened. Keep the ventilators up as high at night as you dare leave them.

Don't be in a hurry about the supports unless the plants begin to lay over, which should not be the case this early. You will need to work between the plants a good deal yet, stirring the soil, pulling weeds and cleaning the plants. This can not be done as handily after the supports are put in place as before.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Seasonable Work.

The check received by the plants in transplanting from field to house will show its effect soon after growth is resumed. Buds form before the shoots have reached a desirable length and, if allowed to develop, will only result in imperfect flowers. This is more marked in varieties impatient of disturbance at the root, notably Lawson.

It is obvious that to let these buds develop is not only a waste of energy and more or less a drain on the resources of the plant, but has a direct influence on the time of flowering later in the season. Allow the buds to attain fair size and then cut back as in the field, but do not remove all from a plant at one time. Go over the beds once or twice weekly, taking off, at the most, two of the largest buds from a plant, making a clean cut with a sharp knife. This topping at intervals reduces the liability of check from removal of too much foliage at once, and is a help in preserving the continuous blooming property.

Some varieties experience little check in lifting, start off vigorously and produce a fair stem at the outset. These may be allowed to flower as the market may seem to warrant, although the low price generally obtained is apt to lead one to the opinion that disbudding thus early is time thrown away, when in fact for several reasons this operation should be carried on at all times. But this subject will be taken up in later notes.

Each grower must learn the needs of his market, observe his plants closely and decide for himself what varieties give promise of substantial returns and are likely to meet the demand. Queen Louise for white and Nelson for pink are two good sorts, naturally early and continuous bloomers also furnishing a very good stem at the beginning of the season. As a rule these two colors will supply what can be called the demand.

From last year's experience with Enchantress, I am satisfied early blooms from this variety should not be attempted. A large proportion of the first buds came bull-headed, developing into flowers of no value.

Every care possible should now be given stock to maintain vigorous growth. The days are quite long yet, but rapidly growing shorter and the tendency in all plant life is now toward rest. Every particle of growth we can obtain naturally, that is, before the heat is turned on, adds to the strength of the plant. To this end break up the surface of the bench soil frequently and remove all weeds and other objectionable matter.

As a discouragement to lurking germs of fungous diseases, an application of grape dust is advisable. Choose a bright day and apply when the sun is the hottest. Keep the air in the houses on the move by giving abundant ventilation and attend closely to the watering.

TOBACCO STEMS.

We can buy tobacco stems very cheap, getting a load of 600 or 700 pounds for 25 cents. We have lots more than we can use for fumigating and would like to know the best and most profitable way of using them. Would it be best to pile them up and rot them for fertilizer or to burn them and save the ashes and use them on carnations and Mums?

P. & P.

I have been unable to secure any definite information regarding the value of tobacco as a fertilizer as compared with animal manure. Growers generally concede that tobacco has some fertilizing qualities, but just how much they do not seem to know. The Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, gives as its opinion that tobacco stems should have about one-half the fertilizing qualities of stable manure. The ashes from tobacco, they think, ought to be as good as wood ashes. If you can get plenty of manure it would seem unprofitable to use the stems in the stead of manure, but it might pay you to burn them and use the ashes instead of wood ashes. I doubt, however, whether that would really pay you, as wood ashes are not expensive unless you have to ship them. It would take considerable time and work to burn enough stems to make a barrel of ashes and it would likely cost you more than wood ashes would cost. If I were in your place I would be disinclined to bother with the stems, except what I wanted for fumigating, etc.

TEMPERATURES.

I have Portia, Ine, Hill, White Cloud, Hoosier Maid, Scott, Lawson, Marquis and Eldorado all in one house. One end will be cooler than the other. How shall I plant them the best? J. L.

I would begin at the warm end and plant the varieties in rotation as they are named: Mrs. Lawson, Flora Hill, Scott, Eldorado, Portia, Ine, Hoosier Maid, The Marquis, White Cloud. I suppose you have two or three benches in your house, and you will have to arrange the varieties accordingly. This will not be difficult when you know which varieties to plant at the warmer end, etc.

THE POINSETTIA.

[The following is the essay by W. F. Rowles, which won first prize in a competition conducted by the Hull Horticultural Association. The culture is British, but the principles are the same the world over.]

The poinsettia is particularly valued on account of the warmth and brilliancy of its bracts, and more especially because of the period over which its beauty extends, a period when any flower possessing rich color in so marked a degree is a boon to the gardener. It goes without saying that good bracts of this plant are not obtained without bringing to bear on the subject untiring care and intelligence. However well versed in the principles of culture the grower may be, he will never reach the truest success in the growth of this or any other plant, without acting up to the fullness of his knowledge and avoiding neglect.

But let us to the question of ways and means. Unlike many other subjects, the poinsettia does not require a very long period of annual growth; in fact it is possible to root the cuttings and see the expansion of the bracts within the space of three calendar months. This, however, is not the usual method. Probably the best time for inserting the cuttings, (which is the orthodox method of propagation) is early in June, thus allowing six months before the bracts show color in December. The cuttings should whenever possible be detached from the old plant with a heel; not that they derive any special facility for rooting therefrom, but mainly that the older portion being harder diminishes the excessive exudation of sap, and thus prevents the cuttings flagging to such an alarming extent as they often do when taken off heelless.

Immediately on detaching them thrust the cuttings into a bucket of cold water which will greatly stop the bleeding. No time should then be lost in having them inserted in "thimble" pots, filled with a mixture of equal parts loam, leaf soil, cocoanut fibre refuse and sand. Make firm, and without delay plunge in fibre refuse in a propagating case. Water well, keep a close atmosphere, damp daily overhead (leaving the case open for an hour afterwards) and shade from direct sunshine until they root.

From that time the air admitted to the case should daily be gradually increased, and the period of shading proportionately decreased. With about a week of this treatment they should be ready to quit the case altogether. But at this time more than at any other is the grower's vigilance most necessary; for he must recognize the fact that as in the ethical and moral so in the horticultural world there is but a thin and almost imperceptible line dividing right from wrong, and at no period of their early existence are the young plants in so close proximity to that none too imaginary line as at the time of which I am now treating. Once a poinsettia is allowed to flag, whether through lack of water, cold draughts, or fierce sunshine, its constitution, and especially the faculty of retaining its foliage is considerably and conspicuously impaired; and here on the threshold of the subject I might remark that the true criterion of correct culture in this plant is the retention of the foliage in a healthy condition right down to the pot. If this condition exists, nothing but an unusual absence of sunshine to ripen the wood, will adversely affect the expansion of desirable bracts.

As soon as the plants have accustomed themselves to the change consequent on removal from the propagating case to a more open atmosphere, they will in all probability require a shift; which event should not be delayed, for they quickly become dry in such small pots. The size should not be less than three inches in diameter, and the compost may consist of loam, leaf soil, peat, sand and charcoal. Let them remain in the same temperature for a few days to recover from the inevitable check of potting, and above all things water carefully, endeavoring to keep the soil always in that happy state which lies midway between extremes of dust dry and complete saturation.

Syringing overhead may be performed twice daily, using water of about the same temperature as the house. A maximum night temperature of 50 to 55 degrees will then be sufficient for them for a few weeks, after which they may be transferred to a cold frame and potted as soon as necessary in 5 or 6-inch pots, using four parts fibrous loam, one part leaf soil, one part peat, some dried cow manure broken up, mortar rubble, and charcoal. Firm potting is advisable, but the use of a ramming stick is wholly unnecessary.

Shading should be employed as little as possible, and only immediately the plants have been repotted or are shifted to cooler quarters, when the tendency to flag would only be heightened by fierce sunshine. The aim should be to keep the stock as cool and airy as possible, and thus build up a robust constitution. As they outgrow the limits of height allowed them in a frame, it will be necessary to remove them to a cool structure where an abundance of air can be allowed.

This feature is equally as important as the watering, for in a closed house on which the sun strikes strongly, and where the plants are far from the glass, they must according to all the canons of horticultural science inevitably become drawn, and all who are in the smallest way acquainted with the habit of the plant must know that it requires no artificial stimulus to extend the distance between the bracts and the pot, but rather a decided effort in the other direction is needed to restrict its aspirations. In view of this I advise that not more than six inches of space be left between the top of the plants and the glass, temporary methods of raising them to that height being employed, and as they approach the glass let the stage be lowered.

Syringing overhead may be continued twice a day, omitting this on wet and sunless days. A stimulant will be needed when the final pots are well filled with roots. This may take the form of liquid cow or sheep manure or soot water, bestowing also on each plant once a fortnight or three weeks a pinch of some approved fertilizer. Do not use the artificial too liberally, for although it may be an excellent preparation it is possible to overstep the bounds of prudence by marked generosity, which in its effect on the future of the plant is more destructive than studied parsimony.

When the plants betray unmistakable signs of forming their bracts, the heat of the house should be raised to a minimum of 60 degrees by night, with less air afforded. The syringe also should henceforth be laid aside. Feeding should be discontinued when the color of the bract is plainly visible, its employment after that time being wasteful.

Plenty of sunshine is now more than at any other time necessary, and without fear of contradiction I can vouch for the fact that if two sets of plants are grown, the one in a light structure and the other in a house whose roof presents a large surface of wood, given an equality in stock, food and attention, the batch in the house receiving the most light will be much superior to the other.

Reference has already been made as to the height of the plant, and it is no exaggeration to say that even under good culture it may be anything up to six feet, but as this is a height which necessarily detracts from its utility, ways and means have been found by gardeners (who possess a remarkable aptitude for using the forces of nature for the realization of their wishes) whereby this great height may be lessened. Briefly, it is thus—when the bract has about half-expanded a cut is made half-way through the stem at a distance of one foot from the bract and immediately below a leaf joint. Some cold water is dashed against the opening to check the outpour of sap, and the plant is left thus for a week or ten days, by which time it will have callused over, and the piece may be completely severed, inserted in a 3-inch pot, and rooted in the ordinary way by keeping a close atmosphere, etc. Thus is the height reduced without materially affecting the size and splendor of the head.

When the heads have been cut off, gradually withhold water from the old plants until all the leaves have dropped off, when the stock may be put under a stage in a temperature of not more than 50 degrees, and kept dry until propagating times arrives.

Now for a word on artificial selection, which is an important phase of up-to-date horticulture, and perhaps of greater benefit to the practical gardener than hybridization. The desiderata in poinsettias are short, sturdy growth, large expansive heads, and numerous wide and highly-colored bracts, by which latter term I mean here the colored leaves. Little scrutiny will be needed to discover plants abounding in these good qualities, and having been marked, it will become the grower to select his cuttings as far as possible from these ear-marked plants, so that a distinct improvement will be observed in a few generations.

Mealy bug, red spider, and scale are the plant's most dangerous enemies, but they are not difficult to combat.

BEGINNINGS IN DESIGN...

VASE ARRANGEMENTS.

Floral Designing.

It may be well to remind ourselves again as to what is included in the term floral designing. Commonly, a floral design means an arrangement on a wire frame, but properly it means the plan with which one or more flowers are used. Unless otherwise designated, the latter should always be the construction put upon the term. It includes the study of both form and color in their broadest sense and application.

In planning a decoration for a room or an elaborate piece, one should always see the finished work in his mind's eye before he begins, but in a simple vase arrangement it is better to give the flowers a chance to arrange themselves. How to give them this chance takes a little care and forethought.

The Receptacle.

In the first place, the choice of a receptacle should be considered. Allow the character of the flower to be used to decide this question. If it comes to a choice between a rose bowl, a slender glass vase, or an odd piece of pottery, a few glances at the flowers themselves ought to determine the best receptacle. In the case of the dahlia bouquet herewith illustrated, one can see that the habits of growth are about like this: Very tall, slender stems, comparatively straight, topped by a short curve, where the flower appears; flowers not very sprangly nor abundant.

An Arrangement of Dahlias.

Assemble the Flowers.

Let us aim to make the finished bouquet, including the vase and flowers, resemble in a general way the plan of the flower stalk. Therefore, we will select the tall, slender, straight vase, not a great quantity of flowers, plenty of foliage and buds. Gather them loosely in your hand at first and set them all together in the vase. They should be set in loosely enough to have some play and they will arrange themselves. Some will nod, some will face forward, some backward, a few will droop, two or three will group themselves together, while another one will appear a little offish with its own buds. Have all sides interesting, not "made up."

It is not wise to construct a bouquet of flowers in a vase one by one. Leave every flower to its own natural bent. Let the foliage reverse itself when it will. You will often find a little lesson in coloring on the under side of the leaf, and you can even read the coloring of the flower and find suggestive combinations for it by the coloring of the under side of the foliage. This is beautifully illustrated in cinerarias.

Coloring and Form.

The coloring in this cluster is rich, reddish brown, with pale straw color and creamy white, with the red predominating. Other good dahlia combinations are dark crimson purple with crimson pink, but no white, bronze and white, rose pink and white.

Not only is it well to choose a receptacle the lines of which are similar to the lines of the flower stalk, but the flowers when set in the vase should so coincide with the outline of the vase that their lines grow together. Authority for this is found in the similarity of form between the flower, or its petals, and the leaves or leaflets belonging to the same plant. In this case one can easily trace the resemblance between the outline of the obtusely pointed petals and the leaves, which may be similarly described. In fact botanists claim that the flower, not the floral organs proper, but the floral envelope, is but a modified leaf. So if we want to get at the real design in any flowers which we propose to use, we can best develop this plan of design by choosing the receptacle whose outline and form conform most closely to the combination of lines which is found in the flower. Gertrude Blair.

TUBEROUS BEGONIAS.

What beautiful things tuberous begonias are when they are successfully grown for bedding purposes, and in masses, wherever they will be in harmony with surroundings!

In all large grounds there are positions that are perfectly proper for displaying the numerous showy summer flowering plants and in our experience the tuberous begonias are exceedingly useful for this purpose. They afford an opportunity to depart a little from the stereotyped ornamental bedding displays we so often see.

The tuberous begonias have been so much improved from the original types during the past twenty years by hybridization, crossing and selection that they have even astonished the plant breeders themselves, in the results they have accomplished in the improvement of these plants.

They are free from stiffness in their habit and character, the foliage is ample and handsome and the flowers range from white through numerous shades of yellow, pink and red, to deep maroon. Last summer many of the blossoms with us were six to seven inches in diameter. For brilliancy of color there is nothing comparable to tuberous begonias and all classes of people are enthusiastic in admiration of them.

We grow them in mixed colors and we think that the effect is just as good as when grown in separate color combinations. How we treat or grow them may be of interest to some. We pot the bulbs at the end of March or first of April and plunge the pots in hotbeds. They are planted out the end of May or first of June, in beds of light sandy loam, liberally enriched with rotted cow-manure, and preferably in a position shaded from the noon-day sun, although they do very well with us in the full sun. Careful and strict attention must be given to abundance of water. If the weather is dry, no mistake will be made by placing the hose spray on them every other afternoon. The tubers should be lifted at the approach of frost, dried and stored in a dry, cool temperature, through the winter months, not below 45 degrees.—John Dunbar in bulletin of New England Park Superintendents.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

M. Aymard, of Montpellier, France, has made experiments in the etherization of plants for forcing which amply confirm what has been already stated as to the value of this process. Growers for market will do well to make preparations in view of the demand for forced flowers in winter and early spring.

Whilst teas and hybrid teas are supplanting hybrid perpetuals, new blood has been introduced by Lord Penzance's briars and their derivatives, and by the crosses with Wichuraiana. The resources at the disposal of the rosarian are vast and varied. Not the least service that the Rose Society can render is to encourage their development.

One branch of experimental work which up to the present time has scarcely received the attention it deserves, is that concerned with the use of insecticides, fungicides, and weed destroyers, together with the appliances best suited for the purpose of distributing the various substances economically and effectually. A few attempts have been made at systematic comparative trials, but these have only been sufficient to prove how much remains to be done, or to demonstrate the benefit which would result from pursuing the work still further.

Columbus, O.—The Fifth Avenue Floral Company has brought suit against Dr. A. A. Thomas to collect a bill of $84.81 for flowers and plants.

CEREUS GRANDIFLORUS.

The accompanying illustration is a reproduction of a photograph from T. Grossenbach, of the Stertzing floral establishment at Maplewood, Mo. It shows two well developed flowers of the night blooming cereus, C. grandiflorus. The plant is several years old and this year produced seven flowers each measuring from seven to eight inches across.

Vegetable Forcing.

P. O'Mara, in a discussion on pollination at the St. Louis convention of the S. A. F., spoke of the method employed by a tomato grower of his acquaintance to secure an early crop indoors. He is in the habit of preserving the last flowers produced on outdoor vines, tying up the branches in paper bags, and using the pollen to fertilize the first flowers produced under glass, which are themselves deficient in pollen. Mr. O'Mara said the pollen keeps six weeks or two months with the bags hung in a dry place.

LETTUCE UNDER GLASS.

Please give me a little information about lettuce under glass. What time should the seed be sown to get the crop off by January 1 to 15? Will four inches of soil do? Will the soil that has been prepared for carnations produce a good crop? What variety of lettuce is the best for market? Does lettuce require as much or more water than carnations?

E. C. L.

If seeds are sown at the end of September or first of October they ought, under favorable conditions, to be ready for the time specified, about three months being required at that season from time of sowing until the crop is at its best. We have had lettuce mature in ten weeks from time of sowing but that was during the spring months, when the days were getting longer and brighter as the crop matured, but at the season you intend to grow this crop the opposite conditions prevail; hence the crop will require rather more time to attain the mature stage.

Lettuce can be grown in four inches of soil but this is rather too shallow, as the soil is apt to dry out too fast, making it hard to maintain an even moisture at the roots. They are far easier grown in solid beds than in raised benches, because, in the first place, they do better where the soil is a few degrees cooler than the overhead temperature, and, in the second place, there is much less danger of extremes in the moisture of the soil, making the plants more susceptible to the attacks of the several fungous diseases to which they are often an easy prey, even under the most favorable conditions and with the best of care.

I have grown good lettuce in benches by placing about two inches of thoroughly rotted manure in the bottom of the bench and filling up over this with about three inches of soil. The manure, acting as a moisture conserving element, eliminated the danger of fluctuation and enabled us to maintain a more even moisture in the soil with less frequent applications of water than where soil alone was used.

I don't know what your carnation soil consists of, but as a rule the compost used for carnations is made rather richer than is really needed for lettuce. In these a good deal of damping is often caused by having too much manure in the soil. If your soil is a free, friable loam of good quality, little or no manure would be required if the bench is filled with manure in the bottom as recommended above. If light, of course, a little would be needed and if stiff and heavy it could be lightened by some good old manure from the horse stables. A free, sandy loam is the best suited for lettuce grown indoors. Such a loam requires to be moderately enriched. For this purpose there is nothing better than moderately decomposed barnyard manure. I have never had satisfactory results from the use of chemical fertilizers.

Regarding variety, head lettuce is invariably preferred. Of this the best we have tried is a variety known as Glass House. It is of the Boston Market type and probably a selection from this old variety. Some still prefer the old Boston Market but Glass House embodies all its good qualities and is less susceptible to disease. If a head lettuce is not essential, Grand Rapids is the easiest grower and produces more weight per foot of bench than any variety I know.

Generally speaking, lettuce does not require so much water as carnations, but it must be even more judiciously applied, their softer nature rendering them more susceptible to injury through excessive dryness or inactivity of the roots should the soil be overcharged with water. Sub-irrigation has been found beneficial, but good lettuce can be grown by watering in the old way if judicious care is exercised in its application.

The regulation of the atmospheric moisture is one of the most important points in the cultivation of lettuce under glass. Growing, as they do, at a right temperature of from 40 to 45 degrees, so little artificial heat is required that there is little danger of the atmosphere being too dry unless during very bright weather. The trouble, especially during the dull winter days, is to get the atmosphere dry enough to prevent condensation settling on the foliage during the night when the house is closed. This condensation is one of the principal agencies in the development of fungus diseases. As a preventive against this watering should be done in the morning and, if possible, on bright days only, when sufficient air can be admitted to dry up the moisture before time to close the house down. TOMATOES.

About August 20 we begin sowing seed for our first lot of tomatoes. This brings the ripe fruit in at the holidays, which is about as soon as many care to pay the price for greenhouse tomatoes. In private gardens, where a continuous supply is often called for, seed requires to be sown earlier than this, but with the commercial grower the idea of a continuous supply does not count; the point is to strike the market when the best price is likely to be obtained.

Regarding varieties, I think it is a good plan to try some of the new ones every year or two, as they come out. Go somewhat slowly at first, until you are satisfied that you have something worth growing. Do not consign some of the good old varieties to back-numberhood simply because you have something with a big name. Though it has succeeded with others, it may not succeed so well with you. Tomatoes are not like roses, carnations, etc., which are liable to deteriorate in the course of a few years. The tomato, being taken from seed, is practically a new plant every year. The others being propagated from cuttings, are but parts of an old plant which, being subjected to the weakening influence of culture under artificial conditions year after year, lose both in strength and vigor. When a plant is taken from a well matured seed there is much less chance of any defects in the parent being present in the offspring, hence less danger of deterioration. Still, this does not lessen the desire for new varieties, and any variety better adapted for forcing than those already existing is always welcome.

The English varieties seem to be more adapted for forcing than our American kinds, probably from the fact that they are grown there entirely indoors and have been so grown so long that the most essential qualities have been brought to a higher state of perfection. To this class belong Sutton's Best of All and Sterling Castle, both varieties that are now pretty generally grown here. Some of the later introductions from this source are Frogmore Scarlet, Frogmore Selected and Eclipse, all proven to be varieties worth trying.

It is surprising how the different varieties behave in different places. We often find a variety doing well here and at some place no great distance away it is far from satisfactory. It is hard to tell, sometimes, what the cause of it is but probably the character of the soil has much to do with it. It is well, however, to try the newer varieties as by this means you are apt to run across something that may show a special adaptability to your particular conditions.

NOTES ON CANADIAN MEETING.

Ottawa has long been known as the capital of Britain's premier colony and as such is the home of His Majesty's representative and the houses of parliament. To the Canadian florists who attended the seventh annual convention of the C. H. A., held there August 9 and 10, it will be remembered as one of the prettiest and cleanest cities of the Dominion and a place of great hospitality. The attendance from outside points was good, especially the Toronto and Montreal deputations making a good showing. The convention was a success in point of interest and general information given by the several papers read and discussions. Exhibits of plants and supplies were large and of excellent quality.

In replying to the address of welcome Mr. McKenna said that the landscape gardeners and growers of cut flowers have a common interest in the promotion of love of flowers. The more flowers we produce the more people will love them; the better flowers we produce the better they will love them. The improvement so noticeable in the last twenty years has been largely owing to organizations such as this.

The president's address was discussed at some length and among the different subjects taken up was changing the tariff. A committee was appointed to bring in a report and when the report was submitted some strong political speeches were delivered, especially by J. Campbell, Simcoe, who championed the protectionists' cause, and Thos. Manton, who stood for the out and out free traders. The committee's report was adopted advocating that azaleas, rhododendrons and pot-grown lilacs be put on the free list, with a duty of 25 per cent on palms and all other plants and cut flowers, also gladiolus and dahlia roots. The secretary was instructed to forward a copy of this recommendation to the minister of customs.

Wm. Gammage's statement that Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is a leader for Christmas was taken exception to by many as it has given so much dissatisfaction to customers that some think it a dangerous plant for the trade, it being felt that if a customer buys a nice plant and pays a big price for it and the flowers drop off next day it might have a tendency to discourage that customer from buying any other kind of a flowering plant.

A good paper by A. C. Wilshire, of Montreal, on "The Florists' Trade from a Retailer's Standpoint" was heartily enjoyed. Mr. Wilshire stated that he uses no wire at all in any of his cut flower work, that is, in supporting the stems. He prefers to put the stems right into the moss. He said that he believes that it detracts from the beauty of set pieces for wires or other supports to be used. This was objected to by a number, who claimed that it adds considerably to the durability of the design to have the flowers supported and thus kept from drooping.

A paper that brought out considerable comment and merriment was by O. G. Johnston, Kingston, entitled "The Best Size of House for the Ordinary Florist to Build." Mr. Johnston said to answer that question he would have to ask several, first, how ordinary the florist was? He thought the size and style of the house did not matter as much as the caliber of the man running it.

A lecture by Prof. W. T. Macoun, horticulturist at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, on hardy perennials suitable for florists and illustrated by over 300 varieties was very interesting from the fact that hardy perennials are yearly coming into more prominence both for borders and cut flowers.

"Modern Iron Greenhouses vs. Old Wooden Houses," was the title of the paper given by Mr. King, of the King Construction Co. Discussion brought out some interesting points as to the length of time that iron greenhouses will last and the life of wooden greenhouses, also the best kind of paint used in painting iron greenhouses. It was plain from the trend of the discussion that to return to the wooden construction would be a very backward movement. On Thursday a visit was made to R. H. Wright's greenhouses. Here we saw a modern house under construction with stone side walls and ends with King's iron construction truss roof. This promises to be a very fine range. Mr. Wright uses nothing but sawdust for fuel and many of the visitors were interested in his boilers. He says that it is cheaper than coal as he gets sawdust for carting it away.

BE EXPLICIT.

The Review is very glad to answer the inquiries of its readers, but often it is impossible to afford much light on the questioner's difficulties because of insufficient details in the query. Where conditions of soil, moisture, temperature and other important matters are not stated it is often not possible to say what is wrong; the best we can do is to say what may be the trouble. Tell us the whole story; then we are pretty sure to find a reader who has experienced the same thing and discovered a way out of the difficulty. And in queries with regard to heating, don't be afraid to go into details with regard to the character of the house or houses; how well built, age, exposures, etc. These are only a little less necessary than the dimensions and indoor and outdoor temperatures in figuring on amount of radiation, etc., and in their absence the best that can be done is to provide for piping which will be safe under ordinary conditions.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Grand Army week did not stimulate the market to any extent, trade being quite dull for several days, but it braced up on August 20. Roses remain at about the same prices as previously quoted. Beauties are more numerous, Worcester Conservatories sending in the largest supply. A few carnations, indoor-grown, of the new crop are appearing and sell up to $2.50 per 100. Outdoor-grown stock continues rather scarce. Asters, particularly white ones, clean out well; quality of these is not up to the mark. The only sweet peas of any value are Blanche Ferry. Gladioli continue to come of good quality. Some very nice ones are included. The price of asparagus and adiantum remains about the same.

The Exhibitions.

The lecture hall was again filled with exhibits August 13. For display of annuals in not less than fifty varieties, filling not less than 150 vases, William Thatcher, gardener to Mrs. J. L. Gardner, was the only exhibitor, putting up a good display. Robert Cameron, from the Harvard Botanic Gardens, showed an extensive lot of annuals in over 150 varieties and species. Mrs. L. Towle had a fine collection of dahlias and annuals, as had Mrs. E. M. Gill. W. Whitman, M. Sullivan, gardener, showed gladioli, asters, native ferns in twenty-five varieties, roses and some fine new delphiniums, which received honorable mention. Bay State Nurseries had a fine table of perennial phloxes. F. L. Ames estate, W. N. Craig, gardener, received a silver medal for a display of cut orchids, consisting of miltonias, cypripediums, Laelia elegans, cattleyas, odontoglossums, etc. Blue Hill Nurseries put up a magnificent collection of hardy herbaceous flowers in 100 varieties, which were finely staged and attracted much attention. They were awarded a first-class certificate of merit. Henry Wild, gardener to Mrs. A. W. Blake, exhibited a superb specimen of Eucharis Amazonica grown in a tub, carrying thirty-one spikes of flowers. It was awarded a silver medal for superior culture. Fruits were again well shown, including indoor grapes, peaches and nectarines. W. C. Winter won in the grape class with fine Black Hamburg, William McAllister being second with Muscat of Alexandria. Vegetables were very good. Fungi made a great display, the small exhibition hall being devoted to them.

The show on August 20 was smaller than usual, owing to the heavy rain, which spoiled many outside flowers. For display of not less than thirty vases of hardy phloxes, T. C. Thurlow won with a thoroughly representative collection. The only other competitor was Anthony McLaren. The date was too late for phloxes, as also for pentstemons, which are practically over, and were not shown at all. In the way of miscellaneous exhibits, R. & J. Farquhar & Co. showed asters in 100 distinct varieties or colors. Messrs. Farquhar also showed a large table of fine spikes of Lilium auratum.

J. H. White, James Wheeler, gardener, received a certificate of merit for Phlox Tapis Blanc (white carpet) a fine variety growing only nine inches in height. Mrs. E. M. Gill had a display of dahlias. Lager & Hurrell sent a nice collection of cut orchids, including Cattleya gigas, C. Dowiana and C. Eldorado, Angulo Clowesii, Oncidium Rogersii and O. crispum and spikes of their excellent strain of Laelia elegans carrying up to a dozen flowers each. These received honorable mention. F. L. Ames estate, W. N. Craig, gardener, had a table of gloxinias, including such varieties as Reading Scarlet, Her Majesty, Duchess of York and others. Fruits and vegetables were well shown and over 100 varieties of mushrooms were shown by the Boston Mycological Club. The closing weekly show of the season occurs on August 27. Asters and herbaceous plants are on the schedule.

The Independent Market.

The directors of the new Boston Co-operative Flower Market have secured premises under Music Hall sufficiently large to accommodate 170 growers and will be ready for the sale of stalls August 31. Believing that the general buying public has not been satisfied with the old location, the directors have chosen one of the most central locations in Boston, where they hope to have the cordial co-operation of all the buyers and growers. An equal amount of additional space is at disposal whenever needed. Chas. E. Dickerman is president and the other members of the board of directors are E. Wood, Norris Comley, Donald Carmichael, John McFarland, Elijah Cartright, George Ayer and Wilfrid Wheeler.

Greenhouse Building.

Lord & Burnham Co. have recently completed or are engaged on the following contracts in New England: Mrs. W. L. Mitchell, Brookline, Mass., conservatory; J. E. Rothwell, Brookline, orchid house; W. S. Spaulding, Prides Crossing, palm house and two ranges of greenhouses; E. S. Draper, Hopedale, palm house; Hollis Hunnewell, Wellesley, conservatory; E. P. Bliss, Lexington, conservatory; C. E. Mackintosh, Holyoke, conservatory; J. F. Flanagan, Newton, three greenhouses and pit; C. W. Loomis, Northampton, one house; C. A. Backer, Billerica, two greenhouses, propagating house and work room; J. B. Herreshoff, Bristol, R. I., one house; Mrs. H. Conant, Pawtucket, three greenhouses; A. E. Austin, Pawtucket, two greenhouses and work room; estate of B. B. Knight, Providence, one house; Mount Desert Nurseries, Bar Harbor, Me., one house; J. G. McCullough, North Bennington, Vt., grapery; F. S. Mackenzie, Woodstock, Vt., greenhouse; Alex. Emslie, Montpelier, Vt., rose house, one plant house and rearranging heating plant; Pine Grove Cemetery, Manchester, N. H., greenhouse; New Hampshire College, Durham, N. H., palm house and four greenhouses; John Saxe, Waterbury, Conn., one house; Miss E. V. Cockroft, Saugatuck, Conn., three houses; Miss C. A. Bliss, New Canaan, Conn., rose house; Stanley B. Fellow, Westport, Conn., one house; Miss F. M. Smith, New Hartford, Conn., conservatory; Commodore M. F. Plant, Groton, Conn., palm house and two wings; John Moore, Norwich, Conn., two houses.

The North Shore.

A visit to what is commonly called the North Shore, which comprises Prides Crossing, Beverly Farms, West Manchester, Manchester and other towns, reveals a wonderful horticultural growth during the past five years. A call at a number of the more important places showed that greenhouse building is steadily increasing, some of the estates having fine ranges of glass.

At Mrs. R. C. Hooper's everything is remarkably well kept. The houses here are quite new and stocked to repletion with well grown plants. In the orchid house cattleyas were bristling with sheathes. A batch of Oncidium varicosum Rogersii carried spikes with 150 to 200 flowers and buds each. In the carnation house Lawson is grown inside altogether and succeeds best treated thus. Lady Bountiful, The Belle, Enchantress, White Lawson and The Queen are also grown, Enchantress being the great favorite. In two divisions devoted to roses, American Beauty is chiefly grown and looked well. A house of tuberous begonias and single zonale geraniums was very attractive. Some of the best of the latter were Ian McLaren, Jacquerie, Rudyard Kipling, Gen. Sam Sloan, J. M. Barrie, Chaucer, Richmond Beauty, Gertrude Pearson and Snowdrop. A house of chrysanthemums looked first-class, as did one of English melons. Favorite sorts are Sutton's A1, Eureka and Windsor Castle. Divisions of grapes and nectarines were very good. Outdoors everything was well kept and William Swan, the head gardener, is evidently thoroughly up-to-date in every way.

At H. L. Higginson's the veteran Joseph Clark always has some interesting plants to show. A walk through his alpine garden is full of interest. Here, under conditions which evidently suit them, liliums are to be seen at their best. L. Henryi carried spikes eight feet high with thirty to forty flowers on each. L. auratum, Hansoni, Batmanniæ and others were equally good. In a greenhouse we noted fine specimens opening flower of Lagerstroemia indica and the variety alba. Hedychium Gardnerianum was also flowering freely.

James Salter has charge of the greenhouses of Philip Dexter. These are mostly lean-to. Several divisions are devoted to grapes, one to nectarines, two to melons, hybrids of Mr. Salter's raising being grown, and others to carnations and chrysanthemums.

At W. B. Thomas' are two nice ranges of houses. One is devoted to grapes, nectarines, melons and cucumbers and the other to roses, carnations, chrysanthemums, violets and antirrhinums. Quite a few orchids were also grown. M. F. Connolly has charge here and grows a fine lot of stuff, both outside and in.

Probably the most expensively built houses are those of W. S. Spaulding, at Prides Crossing. It cost a fortune to blast out the solid rock where the houses now stand. These are very substantially built. They consist of a commodious palm house forty feet high, nicely stocked with plants, including some large specimens of Nephrolepis Scottii; a rose house 117 feet long, chiefly planted with Beauties, a carnation house just being planted with all the newest and best sorts, chrysanthemum, propagating and orchid houses. Of the latter we noted that Edward Kirby, the head gardener, had some fine cattleyas, cypripediums, dendrobiums and oncidiums.

The finest pentstemons we have seen for years were at Miss A. G. Thayer's, where Mr. McGregor presides. Phloxes here, as elsewhere, were also very fine. Mr. McGregor propagates his pentstemons from cuttings in the fall, preferring them to seedlings. His flowers were almost as large as gloxinias, and spikes were in great demand for house decoration.

Farquhar's Christmas Lily.
(Lilium Philippense, awarded gold medal by Massachusetts Horticultural Society. See page 520, issue for August 11.)

J. B. Dow, of Beverly Farms, is perhaps the best known florist in that section. He does a large business among the cottagers. One house here was devoted to Black Hamburg grape. Melons were noted in two houses, Rocky Ford being chiefly grown. Roses, carnations, violets and chrysanthemums receive some attention and a roomy house is used for growing and storing hydrangeas, of which many are loaned in summer and others boarded in winter. A fine summer trade in cut flowers is done here, annuals and perennials being largely grown. Phloxes are a special feature, as indeed they are at all the numerous North Shore estates. Time would not permit of a visit to other establishments in this increasingly popular section.

Various Notes.

Prospects are good for the coming exhibition of the Chrysanthemum Society of America in Boston. President Herrington has appointed a committee of five to assist the members of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society in caring for exhibits, with William Nicholson as chairman.

Alexander Montgomery is confined to bed with a severe attack of malaria, from which his many friends wish him a speedy recovery.

Superintendent Pettigrew, of the park system, was kept very busy the past week showing numerous park superintendents his domains. His visitors hailed from as far away as San Francisco.

Members of the Independent Co-operative Flower Market hope to be able to move into their new quarters under Music Hall early in October.

Wax Bros. have been showing a splendid lot of white gladioli and nymphæas in their windows the past week.

Hoffmann keeps a very attractive store on Massachusetts avenue. The greenhouses at Mount Auburn are also much improved since he took possession of them. W. N. Craig.

THE YOUNGEST FLORIST.

The notes published in recent issues with regard to the youngest florists owning and managing businesses have resulted in a number of communications being received on the subject and it develops that there are a large number of men in their early twenties who are conducting good sized establishments.

Attention is called to Andrew D. Austin, of Milwaukee, who is 25 years of age and owns and manages an establishment of 40,000 square feet of glass, leasing an additional 8,000 feet owned by his father. The elder Austin was a vegetable grower and the young man was brought up in the business. When he was 18 years of age he became a partner and at 21 built 13,000 feet of glass of his own. Since then he has added 27,000 feet and leased his father's place. Two years ago he started to grow carnations, sweet peas and bedding plants in a small way, and has been so successful that he has dropped vegetables entirely and the entire place will be this season devoted to carnations, sweet peas, lilies, tulips and other bulbous stock and bedding plants.

Another enterprising young man who is just starting in the business is Edward Ruch, of Richmond, Ind. He is 24 years of age. He was brought up in the business and is now building two greenhouses which will be planted to carnations for the wholesale market. He has an excellent piece of land upon which he can extend his establishment as his business grows.

Max Engelmann, of Pittsfield, Mass., has not yet become 21, but has been in the business three years. He made his start in 1901 with a house 15x85 feet, after having two years' experience in the employ of a local florist. In the spring of 1903 he was joined by his father, who had no experience in the business, and the firm has since been under the name of R. Engelmann & Son, but under the management of the latter. They now have 6,000 square feet of glass, built by their own hands. They grow roses, carnations, mums and violets and are doing a nice retail business. They made their start under adverse circumstances, the coal strike making the first winter a most difficult one, and last winter the thermometer went down to 38 degrees below zero. Pittsfield is a city of 25,000 inhabitants with eight florists.

The Ley Brothers, of Washington, D. C., sons of John H. Ley, are 22 and 23 years of age respectively. They have for some time conducted a retail store in Washington and since their father's death have taken over an establishment of about 15,000 feet of glass at Langdon, which they are devoting to Boston and Piersoni ferns, adiantums, etc., with two houses of carnations and one of roses and chrysanthemums. The establishment has been a money loser for several of Washington's leading florists, so that the young men understand that they are undertaking a large contract, but they are doing all the work themselves and have put the place in first-class order and have every prospect of making the establishment one of the most successful in the vicinity.

NAME OF VINE.

I enclose a branch of a vine of which I would like to know the name. It was found in the woods and seems to do best growing among brush piles. The root is composed of a string of small tubers resembling potatoes. Planted in a partially shaded situation near the house, it makes a very pretty vine, and the blossoms are very fragrant. No one about here can name it, and I should be pleased to know what it is. A. W. T.

The vine is Apios tuberosa (Moench), a widely distributed plant of the leguminous order, which has often attracted the attention of botanists because of its possibilities of development as a food plant. A few years ago the writer received an order from an investigator in Prague, Bohemia, for a quantity of apios tubers to be planted there to test its availability. The tubers were sent but the overcautious government officials there, fearing insect pests, perhaps, would not allow them to be unpacked, so they were returned to Chicago. The apios is popularly called ground nut and wild bean. The names tuberous-rooted wistaria and micmac potato are also applied to it. The tubers are very nutritious when baked. J. Higgins.

Rockford, Ill.—Sullivan & Slagle, a partnership formed by two well known florists, are building three large greenhouses opposite West Side cemetery. The firm is having considerable trouble in procuring a water supply, being outside the city limits. The city council ordered an extension of the water mains to the greenhouses, but the mayor interposed his veto.

THE PHILADELPHIA WHOLESALE FLOWER MARKET

WILL REMOVE TO

1235-1237 FILBERT STREET

On Monday, August 29, 1904.

You are cordially invited to call and see the new quarters. The growers who sell their flowers in the Market say it is the only way to sell flowers. Will you give us a trial, Mr. Grower?

CONSIGNORS:—We will do our best to give you good returns. Ask any of our consignors how they are pleased.

TO THE STORE KEEPERS:—You can get what you want and all you want every day at the Market.

TO OUT OF TOWN CUSTOMERS:—We can ship you fresh flowers direct from the best growers.

1235-1237 Filbert Street, TELEPHONES. PHILADELPHIA.

Mention The Review when you write.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business continues fair for the season. Beauties and valley are in demand, with the supply of excellent quality. Asters are scarce. Some remarkably fine Semple's are now coming in, the best being sent by Mrs. S. I. Smith, of Secane, to the Flower Market. Gladioli are plentiful. They seem to sell a little better as the season advances. Some nice field-grown carnations are coming in, of the three leading colors, pink, red and white. Dahlias are more plentiful, but as yet they do not sell very well.

From St. Louis.

Delegates to the S. A. F. convention at St. Louis last week are returning in small parties. They report an interesting meeting, a splendid trade exhibit and a very pleasant time at the World's Fair. They speak highly of the horticultural exhibits and the courtesies shown them by the St. Louis florists. Despite the counter attractions of the Fair, many of the exhibitors report excellent business. The bowling team did their best, which was all we asked of them. We hope for better things next year.

Various Notes.

It is said that J. J. Habermehl's Sons have secured the flower privilege in the new Belleview Stratford Hotel, at Broad and Walnut streets.

M. Rice & Co. have received a very warm letter of commendation on their St. Louis exhibit from a western florist. Mr. Rice states his firm's business there exceeded that of past conventions.

Eugene Bernheimer has been receiving some fine Semple's asters.

Ed. A. Stroud expects to cut soon from his July planted carnations. Both the pot and field-grown plants are doing finely, the latter being more stocky but not so far advanced.

Ed. Reid returned on Sunday from a very pleasant trip to the south.

John A. Shellem has 12,000 bulbs of his mammoth freesia. The best measure two and three-quarters inches.

Charles F. Edgar has been visiting the growers in Chester and Lancaster counties.

J. A. Smith, of the H. F. Michell Co., spent Tuesday in Chester, Pa.

John Savage, of Mower street, Mt. Airy, has sold his place, consisting of one and one-third acres of ground, a dwelling house and four greenhouses, to Wm. H. York. Mr. Savage has rented the place until next season, when he hopes to secure a desirable position as manager or superintendent.

Arthur H. Lanser, of Wayne, Pa., feels the full truth of the old proverb, "It's an ill wind that blows nobody good." A near-by freight wreck on the Pennsylvania enabled him to get a two years' supply of coal at 45 cents a ton.

Arthur A. Niessen speaks highly of the condition of John F. Andre's place at Doylestown, Pa. Cutting has just commenced from the young stock, which was all planted in June. Beauties have been doubled in quantity.

Thomas Butler and wife have returned from a pleasant visit to Atlantic City.

George Burton, who has replanted his father's Queen street place with young roses this season, has begun shipping to the Leo Niessen Co.

William J. Young, Jr., of Germantown, has completed the work of moving and rebuilding three greenhouses and is erecting a handsome brick office. The moving was cleverly managed, one-half a house being slipped over the other half into position beyond, thus giving needed space for a building lot in front.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. sold all their exhibit at St. Louis.

Pennock, Niessen and Berger are receiving fine asters which bring the remarkably high price of 3 cents, owing to short crop. PHIL.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade the past week was good considering the season. The cool weather has come back, but too late for our S. A. F. brothers to enjoy. The supply of roses kept fairly up with the demands of the market. The quality of the stock is not so good as it might be. There is a good deal of short-stemmed stock in the market, which sells cheaply. The Brides and Maids cut from old stock are better than those cut from young stock. Prices on these have changed but little, $2 to $3 buying about the best. Beauties are coming in much better and with longer stems. The best of these are selling at from $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen, $3 to $5 per 100 for shorts. Carnations are of very poor quality and too short in stem. Mrs. Fisher is about the best that comes in just now. The very best bring $1.50, colored sorts being poor with demand good.

In outdoor stuff there is considerable call for hydrangeas, also tuberose stalks and gladioli. The asters in now are of poor quality, with a big demand for white and purple. We have had plenty of rain of late, which has made outdoor stock in fine condition. Plenty of greens in the market for all demands.

Various Notes.

The St. Louis boys are delighted with the selection of Washington for next year's convention and we know that our friends, Gude, Freeman and Papa Smith, will give us a good time next year.

The presents received by Messrs. Breitmeyer, Hauswirth, Kuehn and Meinhardt were much admired by their friends and they certainly deserve them for their hard work during the convention.

We are glad Chicago won the bowling match and they certainly have a great bowler to lead them in young Stevens. We came in second, and did not expect so good a position in the race, for a tired lot of bowlers, overworked a week in advance. Patrick O'Mara was the proudest man of all for winning the "spare" prize. We are glad of it, as he has many admirers among the St. Louis boys.

Robt. Craig will remain ten days longer to act as judge at the World's Fair. A great many of the S. A. F. members remain over this week to take in all the sights of the Fair.

William Scott surely had the boys in good humor all of the week, telling them funny stories, and those who never knew him before think him Great Scott sure enough.

The general entertainment committee will meet this week Thursday to settle up convention matters, so as to report at the next meeting of the club, September 8, when a big time is expected. Installation of officers will take place at this meeting and every member is expected to be present to honor the new president.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Market.

The summer season is at its height, and the florists have all been busy during the past two weeks. Cut flowers stay about where they were in price, except sweet peas and gardenias. Sweet peas, owing to the wet weather, are scarce and find a ready market at 25 cents per hundred wholesale. Gardenias are in large demand and good flowers bring $6 a dozen at retail, and half this amount to the dealers. Orchids also have been very scarce, as so many are used every day now for dinner decorations; and the growers cut them very closely.

Various Notes.

The last meeting for August of the Newport Horticultural Society took place Wednesday evening, with President James J. Sullivan in the chair. The committee on prizes reported that several very liberal special prizes had been given the society since the last meeting, to be awarded at the September exhibition. The following committee of arrangements to serve at the autumn show, September 20 to 22, was appointed: William F. Smith, Samuel Speers, John T. Allan, John Baumgartner and Andrew Christiansen. There having been considerable confusion at past exhibitions regarding the classification of dahlias, the society chose a committee, consisting of James Robertson, M. B. Faxon and Alexander McLellan, to prepare a list of the various types and classes, to be used by the exhibitors at the coming exhibition when many dahlias will be shown.

The J. M. Hodgson greenhouses and lily pond, on Bellevue and Le Roy avenues, is one of the commercial show places of Newport. A number of very handsome greenhouses have recently been completed, and are daily inspected by the cottagers and visitors to the city. Hodgson has now one of the largest and most complete floral establishments here, and has been doing a great deal of good work in dinner and luncheon decorations.

The California privet hedges are being trimmed for the second time this summer. Owing to so much wet weather they have made a great growth and are most beautifully green. These hedges are always thoroughly trimmed twice each season, once early in June and now again in August; Newport's privet hedges are one of the features of the place, there being miles and miles of them, more, I feel sure, than in any other one section in this country.

Recent visitors: Mr. Hayes, representing Henry A. Dreer, Philadelphia; A. H. Folger, New Rochelle, N. Y.; W. P. Johnson, of the Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago, and James J. Mulry, representing Sigmund Geller, New York.

NEW YORK, N. Y.—Schedules in the bankruptcy proceedings of George E. Bradshaw, wholesale florist at 53 West Twenty-eighth street, show liabilities of $2,368 and nominal assets of $1,863 consisting of book accounts amounting to $1,839, a check for $14 and $10 in currency.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The triennial conclave of Knights Templar for which preparations have been in progress for the past several weeks is almost at an end and the town presents a gala appearance. The majority of our stores are splendidly decorated for the event and thousands of yards of garlands are used along the principal streets.

But business is almost at a standstill at present. Flowers, outside of roses, are plentiful enough and there is very little demand for anything. Quantities of outdoor amaryllis and tuberoses are being received and bring only what the retailers feel like paying. Asters are being offered by the thousands and the prices remain low except for some fancy stock. A few chrysanthemums are being handled but we do not look for any quantity before next month. Sweet peas are getting short of stem. Lilium album and rubrum are not as plentiful as they have been. They sell wholesale at from $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen stems. Smilax is coming in slowly and is very soft. A goodly quantity of it is being used in window decorations. Carnations are not very plentiful and the price remains the same as it has been for several weeks.

Various Notes.

The Frank & Parodi Co. has consolidated the old store formerly located on the corner of Brooks and Geary street, with the new establishment opened several months ago on Geary street near Grant avenue.

The Art Floral Co., of Sutter street, has entirely remodeled the store and it presents a very handsome appearance.

The Misses Kretman have opened a retail place at 239 O'Farrell street.

The will of the late John Rock, of Niles, has been admitted to probate. It disposes of $20,000, which is left in equal portions to his son and daughter.

J. Seulberger, of Oakland, has just returned from a trip to the Yosemite valley and his son, Frederick, has departed on a month's outing to Lake Tahoe.

T. K. Love, of the Piedmont Floral Co., is rusticating at Kenwood, Shasta county.

J. T. Cochran has purchased the Gould greenhouses at Fruitvale, and is remodeling them preparatory to replanting carnations.

Joseph G. Lewis, for many years employed as an expert budder at the nurseries of James O'Neill, at Haywards, has taken charge of the season's rose budding for Gill's Floral Depot at Oakland.

G.

CONVENTIONS AND TRADE.

I had a conversation a few days ago with one of our principal florists in San Francisco. He has conducted one of the largest stores in his line in the city for over twenty years and the subject of the Knights Templar celebration was spoken of and its influence on the business done in the retail stores during the encampment. "The general public has a highly erroneous impression," said he, "that all that has to be done in this city or other large towns to bring an extra amount of business to the stores is to have some sort of a national celebration for a week or two. But in my experience I have yet to notice any increase in my store receipts during such a period. Of course we always rent a few dozen palms and generally make up a lot of cheap garlands, but the committee having the entertainment of the visitors in charge usually expects the florist to donate his stock or else give it to them at half price, or sometimes they contract bills and when the time comes for the retailer to present his account it is found that the committee spent all the money they had collected to entertain the visitors and the poor florist gets left. It seems to me that the majority of the visitors who come to California on these excursions have just enough money on hand to live on while they are here and pay their passage back and, although they always make a round of the florists' stores they never buy anything and have a tremendous capacity for inquiring the names and prices of everything in sight. During the last encampment we had here I had numerous callers during the day and when I told the price of our roses or carnations the inquirers got very indignant and remarked that they could get flowers just as good in Omaha or Pittsburg for the same price. They evidently thought that free bouquets should go with the other favors that are visited on the strangers within our gates by Californians. Of course it is right and proper that we should entertain all the travelers that visit our shores, and that we do so is well known to anyone who has been here, but that it is a money making time for the florists I positively deny, in fact we are always well satisfied when the assembled hosts take their departure."

Several other retailers whom I approached on the same subject were all of the same opinion, so I think it will be perfectly safe to say that although our state and city no doubt receive much permanent benefit from the thousands of visitors we meet yearly on various excursions sent here, the money is spent principally in hotels, restaurants, places of amusement, street cars and almost everywhere else except in the florists' stores.

G.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

We have had a very trying dry spell, broken at last by copious rains, assuring good carnation plants, as they are now making a very rapid growth. All are planting, and at least half the entire stock is housed. By September 1 nearly all planting will be finished. Roses are gaining length of stem, and are improving in quality. Mum stock is everywhere looking fine. Harrisii are all potted up and stowed away in frames.

The violet crop is not as much of a success as last winter. One grower in the outskirts has lost all his plants. It is doubtful if he will replant, as he has a fine field of good carnation plants, and thinks they will be a safer crop for this season. Another grower thinks he will throw out part of his crop, they are so poor, nothing like what they were last year. But two violet growers, Eli Cross and Crabb & Hunter, are having all around success with their stock to date.

Crabb & Hunter are cutting some very fine long-stemmed Kaiserins. They grow one large house for summer bloom. Carnations are very scarce and the demand far in excess of the supply. Asters have in a measure taken their place. There has been an unusual amount of funeral work all summer that has kept flowers pretty thoroughly cleaned up. Shipping trade has also kept up steadily, making it altogether a busy summer, so much so that it made it impossible for several to attend the S. A. F.

Mr. Diedrich, foreman of the Grand Rapids Violet Co., is out of the hospital and attending to his duties as usual. His arm was so bad at one time it was thought necessary to amputate it, but a strong constitution pulled him through.

The Market.

The local demand the past week has been limited to white stock and a very moderate amount of material has sufficed to satisfy the call. Shipping trade has been fair for the season but it has been a hard proposition for the wholesalers. Stock with quality to make it come up to the requirements of the out-of-town trade has been and is very scarce. Beauties of fair grade are quite plentiful, most of the young stock being just on with the first crop, but other roses of shipping grade are hard to find. Brides of good length of stem are desirable property and bringing profitable prices. Few Kaiserins are to be had. Other roses are in less demand.

The recent heavy rains have damaged all outdoor stock, particularly carnations and usable flowers are scarce, especially white. Sweet peas are practically out of it. Asters are very plentiful and there is considerable waste on this item. Gladioli are also abundant and largely used. The best hardly bring over 3 cents. Dahlias of good quality are appearing. Small receipts of valley suffice to make this item appear plentiful, for there is little call for it. No order for green goods goes unsatisfied.

Various Notes.

H. Bauske says he sees little good rose stock in sight and lays it to the wide variations in temperature, some days, like last Sunday, being very hot, followed by nights so cool that fires seem almost a necessity. He does not look for good, clean stock to be as abundant as usual early in the fall.

The town was full of convention visitors Sunday and for several days this week, among them President Breitmeyer, who found time to call on Edgar Sanders. He was accompanied by Mrs. Breitmeyer and when they went east Mrs. P. J. Hauswirth went along, intending to go on to Buffalo for a visit.

Benthey-Coatsworth Co. is cutting Benthey's Perfection aster in quantity.

The F. E. Butler Floral Co. will open a retail store at 291 Dearborn street about September 10. There is no flower store within several blocks.

Mrs. Horton, of Bassett & Washburn's, is on her vacation.

C. M. Dickinson went to Mt. Clemens Monday night. He is having a serious time with his throat.

Among the week's visitors were C. Hauser, Jr., of San Antonio, Tex., and H. Harrington and his son-in-law, L. C. Beall, Jr., of the Harrington Floral Co., Vashon, Wash., the latter two on their way to New York; Hans Tabler, of Traverse City, Mich.

George H. Phelps died at his home here August 17. He was 52 years of age and had been ill since Christmas, at which time he was taken to the City Hospital for an operation for an abcess, from which he never recovered. After five weeks in the hospital he returned home but was confined to his bed until death relieved him. Mr. Phelps was one of the most successful growers of carnations in the east, always having the best blooms shown in this vicinity. He was a man of unusual intelligence and a very interesting conversationalist. He leaves a widow and one daughter.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

The regular meeting of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Association was held August 13, President Dunbar in the chair. The aster was the subject for the evening's discussion. Very few seemed to have asters this year free from disease, many having large patches of them all diseased. There were a few nice blooms of the Pride of the Market aster staged. J. Bradley was awarded five points and Claud Wilson three. The judges were J. Cook and Mr. Romer. The subject for our next meeting is to be tomatoes.

CUMBERLAND HILL, R. I.—Fred I. Vose built a house 20x100 last year for carnations but did not get it done in time and grew a crop of vegetable plants in it, including 16,000 tomato and 10,000 cabbage. This year he is putting up a house 20x60 for roses.

LONGFELLOW beans, from present indications, are likely to be a short crop.

NOTHING is being added to the pea crop by the revised reports from the growing sections.

BEAN crops in New York state are said to be looking better than those of Michigan.

SIXTY per cent, as compared with last year's crop, is thought to be the right estimate of the onion sets that will be available for shipping this year.

BOWMANVILLE, ILLS., now a part of Chicago, besides being the home of the largest truck farmer in the west, is likely to soon be known as the largest mushroom growing center.

THE prospect for a bean crop remains unchanged. The pods of Wardwell's are not filling well. This fault, although characteristic of this variety, is more noticeable this year than ordinarily, and is likely to shorten the crop considerably.

A CORRESPONDENT would be glad to hear from anyone having particular knowledge of onion set growing, the reason why one part of an onion set bed is ready to harvest and another part of the same bed, sown the same day, with the same lot of seed, stands green and unmatured.

THE weather of the past week has been unfavorable for the sweet corn, melon and cucumber crops. Ordinarily the third and fourth weeks of August show a very marked gain in the growth of corn and a rapid setting of the fruits on the cucumber and melon vines. According to general reports this has not been the case this year and, in the opinion of many of the growers, there is little chance that the present deficiency will be made up during the remaining weeks of the growing season.

LEBANON, PA.—D. Hammond and D. G. Mish, of the Mish Greenhouses, have bought out E. M. Sanders.

ALBION, N. Y.—Newman & Gatz are building three houses, one 45x100, and two smaller structures, with heating plant, etc. They will grow cut flowers for shipment to Buffalo and Pittsburg.

NOT THE SAME KIND.

The anxious mother rings up what she thinks is the day nursery to ask for some advice as to her child. She asks the central for the nursery, and is given Mr. Gottfried Gluber, the florist and tree dealer. The following conversation ensues:

"I called up the nursery. Is this the nursery?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"I am so worried about my little Rose."

"Vat seems to be der madder?"

"Oh, not so very much, perhaps, but just a general listlessness and lack of life."

"Ain'd growing righd, eh?"

"No, sir."

"Vell, I dell you vat you do. You dake der skissors und cut off apoud two inches vrom der limbs, und—"

"Wha-a-at?"

"I say, dake der skissors und cut off apoud two inches vrom der limbs, und den turn der garten hose on for apoud four hours in der morning—"

"Wha-a-at?"

"Turn der garten hose on for apoud four hours in der morning, und den pile a lot of plack dirt all around, und shpringle mit insegt powter all ofer der top—"

"Sir-r-r?"

"Shpringle mit insegt powter all ofer der top. You know usually id is noddings but pugs dot—"

"How dare you? What do you mean by such language?"

"Noddings but pugs dot chenerally causes der troubles; und den you vant to vash der rose mit a liguid breparations I haf for sale—"

"Who in the world are you, anyway?"

"Gottfried Gluber, der florist."

"O-o-oh!" weakly. "Good-by!"—Buffalo Express.

"The Review has been a welcome visitor the past year; it is very instructive, just what every florist ought to have."—S. M. Wyatt, Watseka, Ill.

CHEAP GREENS.

Cannot one of your many expert contributors give some information anent florists' greens? I do not mean smilax, Sprengeri, asparagus, ferns, selaginella, etc., which we all know about more or less (especially less), but about some greens that can be grown in odd corners or under benches so that they do not occupy valuable glass space and are therefore cheap? Customers are constantly asking for some green that can be "thrown in," so that this demand is really a tax. I recollect when living in Paris some forty odd years ago, that all the bouquets and designs in the florists' windows were made up with abundance of green; in fact, in Germany, France and Italy flowers in any form are not regarded as tasteful and complete without an abundance of green. This is more the case on the continent, where the sunny skies resemble our own, than in London, where the bright colors of flowers are a greater relief in the dark, leaden days. Cannot some true lover of the florists' art help us out? I have Scott's Manual but that says nothing on the subject applicable to my wants. I have two faults to find with Scott's Manual; it is so good that there is not enough of it, and there ought to be some blank pages at the beginning or end for making notes for future reference. I have had my copy rebound with blank pages inserted. A. B.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business has been very good during the past week and at the present time things look very favorable. Funeral work was the cause of the increased demand. The long dry spell has at last been broken, but the damage caused by the lack of rain for such a long time has been considerable and has resulted in much loss to many florists.

The supply of all kinds of cut flowers is light. While the cut of short-stemmed roses is increasing, there are but few long ones, not nearly enough to supply the demand. Long-stemmed Kaiserins are in good demand at high prices. Beauties are coming in fine shape. They seem to be doing very well with many grown this year. Some as long as thirty inches are being cut and bring $2.50 per dozen. Shorter grades are in good supply and sell well. Other red roses are not very plentiful and those that do come in are of poor quality.

There is not much change in the carnation market. There is an increase in the supply of field-grown blooms, but long-stemmed flowers are very scarce. A very few are being cut from plants that have been left in the houses over summer, and their quality is very fair, but aside from that there are none. Some very good asters are to be had and bring good figures, but by far the majority of the stock coming in is of an inferior quality. Even at that they sell well and white ones especially are not equal to the demand. Gladioli are moving better. The supply is about the same as last reported but the demand for them is much better. Some very fine ones are seen. Tuberoses are in good supply and sell reasonably well. The scarcity of other white flowers proved of benefit in moving them. Green goods are the same as last reported.

Various Notes.

The Hamilton County fair that was held at Oakly last week brought out a lively competition between three of our florists. The main exhibitors were Henry Schwarz, J. F. Conger and George & Allan. In the best single design, some very nice work was exhibited. H. Schwarz was first, George & Allan second and J. F. Conger third. The prizes were all worth winning and the exhibition as a whole was much better than one expects to see at a fair.

Fred Gear has gone to St. Louis to have a look at the Fair. W. H. Gear has just returned from a visit at Mt. Clemens. C. J. OHMER.

ST. PAUL.

A Heavy Storm.

Saturday night, August 20, this city was visited by a tornado which uprooted, broke and split hundreds and hundreds of the largest and finest shade trees in all parts of our city. Whole blocks were covered with them and also with broken telegraph wires, poles, bricks from fallen chimneys, etc. In the business district the number of smashed plate glass front windows will reach into thousands. As a matter of course, the florists suffered a great loss. E. F. Lemke has one house entirely destroyed and so has Henry Puvogel. His place looks simply awful; not only glass and rafters went up in the air, but the frame with heavy posts were moved by the fierce storm. W. Fleischer's large brick chimney came down, falling across the office and smilax house, making a total wreck of it. C. Hansen, on Dale and Como streets, lost his elevated rose house and a lot of glass. From the rest I could not get any information, as all phones are out of order.

Fifteen thousand square feet of glass were smashed by the storm at the greenhouses of August Swanson at Merriam Park. A large brick chimney and wind mill were blown down and the roofs of the greenhouses were also carried away. Mr. Swanson estimates his loss at fully $3,000.

The tornado was accompanied with hail and a big cloudburst, transforming all lower streets and places into lakes and rivers inside of ten minutes. Some of our parks suffered greatly and it will take many years to have all these trees replaced in same size and shape. This is the first experience of its kind for St. Paul in its fifty years' experience, and we trustfully hope it will not return for the next fifty years to come.

C. BUSSJAEGER.

SAGINAW, MICH.—Henry W. F. Goetz has returned from a trip to Hinsdale, Ill., accompanied by a bride. Mr. Goetz is a son of J. B. Goetz and was for a time employed by Bassett & Washburn at Hinsdale, where he met Miss Hermine Miller. The wedding was August 11.

WE are very much pleased with the REVIEW and always find much information in it.—D. A. VINCENT, Ionia, Mich.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

THE cornuses nearly all do well in shady situations.

THE liquidambar and the white oak are two large trees which do well in low, damp places.

THE nursery industry in the United States represents an investment of nearly $60,000,000.

THE demand for the better grade of stock, both fruit and ornamentals, is steadily on the increase.

THERE are 16,000,000 peach trees in Georgia approaching the bearing stage, and still planting goes merrily onward.

JOHN GEE, foreman for the Robinson nursery, Bloomington, Ill., fell from a train near Joliet, Ill., August 18, and was severely injured.

WILLIAM GIBBS, foreman of the Phœnix Nursery Co., Bloomington, Ill., has made an extended visit to Arizona, Utah and Colorado this season.

THE osmanthus is an uncommon hardy evergreen which deserves to be more widely planted. The foliage resembles the holly, though smaller and not so stiff, and it transplants easily.

THE American Pomological Society has appointed committees to make a study of the various phases of fruit growing for which special advantages are afforded by the exhibits at the World's Fair. The work of the commitees will be published in pamphlet form.

MANSFIELD, PA.—Mrs. Robert Crossley has a fine business and 16,000 feet of glass. Carnations are largely grown, with some roses, palms, ferns and bedding stock. Considerable space is also given to lettuce.

ANOKA, MINN.—Hail at 4 o'clock on the morning of August 21 broke 600 lights of 16x16 double strength glass in the greenhouse of the Pratt-Ford Company. The houses were just planted to carnations and the stock was cut up quite badly. The Kimball greenhouses lost about 400 lights. Carnation plants looked fine in this section and those which escaped the hail give excellent promise.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during the last few weeks has been a considerable improvement over July and it would look as though the fall business, which usually commences in September, had made itself felt in August. During the last week there has been a large amount of funeral work, and this may have had considerable to do with the improvement of business. All kinds of flowers are very scarce, especially roses and carnations. Good white asters are scarce. Sweet peas of good quality find ready sale and gladioli have also moved fairly well during last week, while what few dahlias are coming into the market are picked up at once.

The weather has been very much against outdoor stock, as the continual rain has had a very injurious effect on blooms in developing. Should the weather dry up and we get good September weather there should be a big stock of asters and other outdoor flowers, as the season has been very favorable for growth of plants.

Various Notes.

The Toronto delegates who were at Ottawa convention seem to have settled down again to the regular routine of business, notwithstanding the severe shaking up they received at the hands of the eastern men before they got away from Ottawa on that memorable Thursday night. The Toronto boys all look back on the Ottawa convention as the best yet and intimate that if the Montreal convention next year beats it those at the head of affairs will have to keep moving.

H. G. Dillemouth, manager of Dunlop's store, is back to business, after his vacation, looking hale and hearty.

We understand that Miss Miller, daughter of F. C. Miller, of Miller & Sons, Bracondale, is about to open a store on College street.

J. H. Cobb, of Peterboro, was a visitor to the city during the week. D. J.

WATERLOO, IA.—Charles Sherwood will erect a modern greenhouse next season.

DENVER.

Business has been very quiet during the past two months, but is now assuming an air of activity, partially perhaps because there are a few good things now coming into market. There has been an enormous lot of common outdoor stuff which finds but little market. Mauff and the Park Floral Co. have been cutting Beauties, for the past month, which are very creditable for the time of year and are now finding a ready sale. Mauff is also cutting a few Queen of Edgely and thinks a lot of it. Benson has been cutting carnations almost the whole summer from his new houses. They were planted out in the spring on solid benches and later on a new roof put over them. This mode of culture has always proven very satisfactory out here, the principal advantage being a fairly long stem from the start and a fresh-looking, good-colored flower entirely different to those cut from field-grown plants at the same time.

Several of the growers have been adding to their establishments the past summer and a general improvement has kept the progressive ones busy. All are looking forward to and preparing for a prosperous season. Some of the sanguine ones are going into it pretty hearty. Perhaps the satisfactory business of last season makes the coming one look propitious. Hall, Davis Bros., Benson and Brinkert have all nearly completed their additions. The latter has increased his carnation capacity by 10,000 feet and is now ready for housing.

Ben Boldt, while not adding to his greenhouse capacity at Mud Lake, is making considerable improvement. His new wagon, while an elephant in capacity, is a beauty in appearance and a credit to any floral establishment. It is destined to haul the bulk of his plants to the retailers in the city and is well equipped for that purpose.

The majority of the florists who have been out of the city seeking recreation are now back and in harness. Mr. Valentine has just returned from the convention and speaks very highly of its success.

The Park Floral Co. bowling contest terminated on the first of the present month. R. S. Mahan was the winner of the trophy, having made the highest increase from the first of January, when the contest started. Mr. Mahan is proprietor of the Alpha Floral Co., a comparatively new member of the profession, and an enthusiast in bowling matters. He increased his bowling average in the tournament from 124 per game to 154. The following were the successful winners by months: January, Frank Fraser; February, Harry Betz; March, R. S. Mahan; April, Harry Betz; May, J. A. Valentine; June, John Berry; July, Chas. Benson.

TESTIMONIAL.

HARTFORD, CONN., April 20, 1904.
MESSRS. BAUR & SMITH, Indianapolis, Ind.

GENTLEMEN:—I have been much pleased with the behavior of a trial lot of "Indianapolis" sent me last Spring.

Owing to a wet season it was necessary to house very early when the plants were small: however, this treatment seemed to suit them exactly for they made rapid growth and have been magnificent plants all winter.

The habit is ideal, stems extra long and of a nature to carry the flower gracefully.

From what our customers say of its color and keeping qualities, together with my experience with its blooming qualities, I should recommend it as a first-class commercial variety. I might add that cuttings produced are sturdy and root easily. Very truly yours,

GEO. S. OSBORN.

We have about 5000 fine Field-Grown Plants to sell this Fall at $12 per 100; $100 per 1000. First come, first served.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Trade is about the same as last report, except "more so." The boys, however, are getting used to it, and one retailer thought it a joke that he did not have a single sale one day last week. Stock continues generally poor. Carnations have entirely disappeared except outdoor stock, which is of no use on account of the numerous rains.

Various Notes.

We have had many hailstorms in this vicinity during the past week. Some sections report hail as large as walnuts, but there has been no report of losses. However, on August 17 it was so heavy at Millvale that the men at Patrick Maier's ran out of the houses feeling sure that they were doomed.

Ernest Zieger is at home from his trip to Iowa, feeling much improved in health, but with large ideas about the west. If you know Ernest, get him to tell you about the corn.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is getting some fine Kaiserin and Chatenay roses from Fred Burki, at Bakerstown.

There is a small building boom in this section. Geo. A. McWilliams, of Natrona, is putting up three new houses, each 25x300. He says that you can bet these are above high water mark; one flood is enough for him. Mrs. E. A. Williams is also rebuilding most of her houses, as well as making some additions.

While the veteran, Chas. T. Siebert, has been confined to his room the past two weeks, he has verified the title of "the sleepless and restless florist" by rushing the erection of his new store, corner Beatty and Baum streets, east end. There are to be many new features in this store, which we will tell you about when it is finished.

While there are many rumors every week of new commission houses starting here, it seems an assured fact that J. B. Murdoch & Co. will open this fall. That will make three wholesale cut flower houses for this city. I guess that will hold them for a while. Hoo-Hoo.

Sioux City, Ia.—J. C. Rennison has started a new house, 35x265, for carnations.

BOILER AND PIPING.

Please tell me the number of feet of 1¼-inch pipe to heat two houses 16x50 feet and one 20x30, each nine feet to ridge, with three-foot side walls? Houses are all connected. The boiler is thirty inches wide and ten feet long, with twenty-one 3-inch tubes. Is it large enough? J. L.

To maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in your houses during the coldest weather will require for the house 20x30 fifteen runs of 1¼-inch pipe, or better, fourteen runs of 1¼-inch and a 2½-inch overhead flow pipe, using the 1¼-inch pipes as returns. For each of the houses 16x50 there should be a 2-inch overhead flow pipe and twelve runs of 1¼-inch as returns. Part of these returns should be supplied with valves so that they may be turned off in case it is desirable to run one house at a lower temperature than the others. Not more than two-thirds of the boiler capacity will be required to heat the present range. Six square feet of grate surface will be required for hard coal, and four square feet for soft coal. An expansion tank of at least twenty gallons capacity will be necessary, and should, if possible, be connected at the highest point in the system. L. C. C.

KANSAS CITY.

Stock is about the same. Roses are very small and carnations are very short-stemmed, most of them being cut in the field. American Beauties are scarce.

John H. Vesey is cutting some nice long-stemmed dahlias that he is growing inside.

R. S. Brown & Son are cutting some good asters and canna flowers.

Kansas City florists who went to the convention and to see the Pike were W. L. Rock, Arthur Newell, Albert Barbe and Samuel Murray, Miss Alma Beeler and Mrs. Ellsworth, of Geo. M. Kellogg's retail store.

Mrs. Fannie L. Brittain has returned from an eastern trip of six weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. A. Humfeld have returned from a trip throughout Colorado, looking fine.

Superior Boilers Are Good Boilers.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettic.

BEGINNINGS IN DESIGN...

VASE ARRANGEMENTS.—II.

Gladioli.

Why a stone jar should be considered the best receptacle for this particular style of flowers is not apparent at first thought. Why not a rose bowl, a delicately tinted china dish, or a slender crystal vase? In the first place the inflorescence of the gladioli necessarily means weight where any number of the flowers are used. Therefore we must have something which not only has the appearance of weight, but actually is heavy enough to counterbalance the top-heavy stalks. Never put any arrangement of flowers and vase before people which will make them uncomfortable or nervous, as a delicate vase might do if filled with long, heavy flower stalks, tempting a destructive breeze.

Such flowers as gladioli, hydrangeas, hollyhocks, dahlias or chrysanthemums and other large, robust flowers, naturally adapt themselves to a rustic setting, as is at least suggested my this use of a stone pitcher as a receptacle. Then, too, the color of this particular jar is a dark brown, which is a good setting for the pinkish creams and yellows of the gladiolus flowers. A perfect gladiolus stalk hasn't a very decided curve; neither has our stone jar. The lines of the flower stalks can grow from the lines of the dish without any very abrupt change, so we find harmony of form.

The ease with which this union of lines between the flower stalks and the receptacle can take place, depends upon the quantity put into the vase. Too many crowded in would make the lines unnaturally straight, while too few would play at right angles with each other. Two dozen was the number used in this pitcher of about five inches in diameter, with the grass and extra foliage, the latter feature with the shadow effect around the top of the vase making a—well, something otherwise than so many stalks in a dish, soda fountain straws-in-a-glass fashion. By the few over-hanging flower stalks, and the extra foliage, deep shadows are cast over the rim of the pitcher, thus blending the lines of the pitcher with the lines of the flower stalks, and making them one, which is the secret of correct vase arrangements.

Find the receptacle, the lines and form of which can be continued into the lines of the flower stalks most easily, and you have found the proper receptacle. If you find this a somewhat difficult task, make shadows, as is done here. If then you cannot accomplish your purpose, they do not properly belong together. After a little practice in this line, your eye will do the work of hands and eyes too, and you will be able to accept or reject a receptacle on sight. The shadow softens the hard look of the stone and helps the harmony with the flowers, half of the beauty and depth of which are in the effect of light and shade.

It will be observed that the central part of the bunch is carried to a greater height by pulling a stalk or two out above the bouquet. Fill in the space left vacant with extra foliage or stems. Use broken or hanging stalks like those on the left of the vase sparingly; otherwise it will become a disagreeable mannerism. Other devices of relief can be invented, like a simple spray lying flat at the base of the vase or a creeping bit of foliage around or off from the vase. But let none of them be every-day indulgences. Have a wandering line or two in all of your vase arrangements, but don't use the same material repeatedly.

Here are introduced the soft grasses as relief. Other means to the same end would be the use of other endogenous foliage, or grain stalks with the gladioli. As far as a fine effect is concerned, nothing could be more beautiful than the addition of some corn tassels and silk with such a bunch. But feel your customers' breadth of art instinct first. Purely rustic beauty seems to go unappreciated except in the heart of the cities. Educate taste by an occasional display of this kind in your window. As a matter of fact the artistic points of a corn stalk are seldom excelled. There is nothing that grows but has its beauty, but the difficult part for us is to become able to find the proper place for it in our portion of the decorative world.

Cutting and Packing.

The cutting of blooms, their care and treatment previous to shipment, and the method of packing them carefully so that they may reach their destination in good shape, is a matter which nearly concerns every grower and which should be made a special study by the younger brethren.

In taking the cut special care should be given to leave the most suitable eyes, so that a future crop of robust stems may be assured. To take off the cut neatly, so that a ragged, long-sliced, unsightly stump may not be left, it is necessary to have a well sharpened knife or pair of scissors. Personally I prefer the scissors, as if they are kept in good order and properly handled they leave a neater and smaller wound.

I have often wondered why some growers, who are careful in most other respects, run the risk of injuring the prospects of a future crop by compelling their help to take off the morning cut by the light of a lantern when it is impossible for even the keenest sighted to select the proper eye at which to cut.

Questioning one grower, he gave as his reason that he wanted to get his cut before the blooms were heated by the sun, as they keep so much better when cut in the cool of the morning. I, however, noticed that he did not scruple to cut at any hour of the afternoon, even when the blooms had been exposed to a hot sun all day, and ship within the hour.

This system must have appeared very inconsistent to intelligent help and would be apt to leave the impression that the employer was trying to get an hour or so from his help gratis.

As soon as possible after the cut is taken the stems should be immersed in water, which should reach well up the stem. The temperature of the water should be very little below the temperature of the house from which the roses were cut.

The blooms should be assorted into different grades, according to length and quality of stem, having due regard to size, shape and color of the flowers. As there is at present no uniform method for classifying the different grades, each grower has to study the demands of his market and grade accordingly.

The cut should then be placed in the cool room, which should have a temperature of not less than 48 degrees, many growers preferring 50 to 52 degrees as the ideal. Well grown stock treated at any of the above temperatures can be shipped with perfect safety twenty-four hours after cutting.

Next to care in packing, so that no necks may be broken, comes neatness and cleanliness. How pleasant it is to open a box in which the blooms have been carefully packed, in well fitting, unsoiled paper. It gives a fresh, crisp appearance to even inferior blooms, while the finest selected stock can be given a trashy look by slovenly packing with soiled material. RIBES.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Poinsettias.

In last week's issue is published a prize essay delivered at Hull, England, on the poinsettia. We think the prize was awarded quite as much for its literary excellence as for the value of its cultural directions. Perhaps those who followed its directions to the letter would not go far wrong, yet being British, there are some points in it that would be unnecessary to follow in this country. Growing a plant from June to December and when six feet high cutting off the top to obtain a plant one foot in height seems a laborious and expensive method. True, plants propagated in June and given the very lightest house will run up four or five feet high. These early propagated plants are, however, with us used for cutting, and if planted out in a bed of five or six inches of soil give immense width of bracts. Cuttings put in the sand in early August and not neglected for either heat or nourishment at the roots will make fine plants fifteen to eighteen inches in height in 5-inch pots by Christmas, as has been frequently said in these columns.

The single plant of poinsettia, however well grown, is no longer in very good demand with us. It is the pan eight to twelve inches in diameter that has much the better sale, and for this purpose, if pans containing from six to ten plants and not over twelve inches in height are desired, you can put in a batch of cuttings now, but plants that are now in 2-inch pots will make stronger plants and finer bracts. In making up the pans select for each pan plants of uniform height and strength. The pans won't be all alike at flowering time, and they need not be, but each pan will be perfect in itself.

Referring to that well written paper again, if you wanted only one batch of cuttings, then you could cut with a heel, but you would get no more cuttings from that break. We want to put in successive batches of cuttings throughout the summer and the heel is not necessary. Of course it would not be British unless the formula for the compost was most elaborate and contained half a dozen ingredients. All that is nonsense. A good, fresh, rather heavy loam, with a fourth of half-rotten cow manure is all that is needed, and for the 5 or 6-inch pots a crock and piece of green moss to keep the drainage free.

It seems the propagating case or little house inside a house is still in vogue in England in propagating such free rooting, simple things as the poinsettia. The idea is to keep the atmosphere close, prevent evaporation and then there is need of little water. This country's method is much more simple and less expensive. Insert the cuttings in the sand as you would those of coleus. Keep them shaded and water copiously twice a day and you will not lose a cutting. When first potted off, which should be as soon as the roots are half an inch long, they want to be kept moist at the roots and well shaded. But directly they get hold of the soil, and to the end of their existence, they want the fullest, brightest light, with all the air that can be given them during warm weather.

Frames, either with sash or without, are dangerous places for these plants. Nothing like a bench in your houses, where neglect is inexcusable. With the exception of these few points, the "prize essay" is excellent and in concluding remarks on this showy plant, let me repeat that the falling of the foliage is more often due to starvation of the root than low temperature, and never disturb the roots, either by a shift or making up the pans, later than the last week in October. They won't stand for it and we have proved it.

Zonal Geraniums.

I said early in August, don't propagate until September. The time is now here. Much will depend upon how plentiful a stock you have to take cuttings from and how many plants you need. If you have an abundance of stock and can take off at one time all the young stock you require, then there is no hurry for two weeks more. We sometimes get a very hot spell about the middle of September and it is when the weather is hot and you have to keep the cuttings well watered that trouble begins and they go off by the thousands with what we call the black rot. We all know it. It is caused, I suppose, by the cellular tissue of these succulent cuttings absorbing so much water that the cells burst and decay and death ensues.

If you are short of a variety, or all varieties, then begin at once, for if judiciously cut you will before frost get another batch of excellent cuttings. With us geraniums are more than usually succulent this year, through the frequent rains, which makes them all the more risky to root. Get a bench full of fresh, sifted loam, not too sandy, and mix it with a fifth or sixth of sifted, rotten manure. Robust-growing varieties will need a 2½-inch pot. Less vigorous kinds may do in a 2-inch.

Cut the cuttings just below a joint. Never mind what has been said about the non-value of cutting at a joint. The texture of the cutting is less sappy there than between joints. Pot firmly. This is one of the most important points. Don't thumb the surface, but get your thumb and finger down as a wedge to make the soil firm around the bottom of the cutting. If you have a spare bench in a light house, there is no better place; if not, a cold frame outside does very well. A thorough watering when first potted is most important. Watering after that until they are rooted is pure judgment. They may want another watering again in three or four days and, if the weather is dull and cool, they may not want the soil wet again in a week. Don't water them until the soil is again what the gardener calls "on the dry side." On bright mornings a light spraying that will wet the leaves but not the soil is most beneficial. Little if any shade is needed after the first week and only in the brightest hours.

We prefer to put all zonal geraniums into pots, in which they remain without a shift until after the rush of the holidays. They make short-jointed, stocky plants, much to be preferred to plants rooted in sand. The scented-leaved, tricolor and ivy-leaved sections we like better to root in the sand in the ordinary way, but there is no hurry about that until toward the end of September.

Bouvardias.

The first week of September should see these plants on the bench. They are, perhaps, not very profitable, neither are they common of late years, and our customers are looking for the uncommon and you can get a good price for these honeysuckle-like flowers. They lift badly if lifted carelessly. If the ground is dry and you think you are going to leave a lot of their working fibres in the ground, soak it the night before. You must get all the roots. Plant them one foot apart on the bench, closer if the plants are small, in five inches of soil. Wet the soil thoroughly after planting and syringe three or four times a day, or as long as any wilting takes place. This is a plant that enjoys a good syringing every day in the year, for it is very liable to be infested with red spider.

Shade, of course, is necessary until the plants are rooted in their new surroundings. If you pinched these plants a few weeks ago they will need it no more, but if that was not done and the growths are few but long, shorten back the growths a few inches, as soon as you get them planted, or, better still, as soon as they get hold of the soil on the bench.

Sweet Peas.

These are now one of our important winter flowers and at some large establishments they are produced from Thanksgiving until the flowery month of June. If you have a bench vacant now the seed can be sown at once, two or three in a group, six or eight inches apart, and the rows across the bench eighteen inches apart. Five inches of soil on the bench or a ground bed is enough. If too much soil, there is a great tendency to grow and not flower. At each group of plants let a string run up, just as you would for smilax, only a stronger string and six or seven feet long. Two plants to a string is enough. Keep all bottom and lateral growth pinched off and from the original growth you will soon pick flowers and continue to pick for perhaps two months. To have good peas continuously from, say, December 1 to June 1, several successive sowings are necessary.

We don't all have vacant beds in the months of September and October, yet later, when the mums are thrown out, we do and sweet peas come in well to occupy the bench after early chrysanthemums, so instead of sowing on the bench now, you can sow three or four seeds in a 3-inch pot and keep them in a frame out of doors until planting time. A very slender stick will support the little vines until the bench is ready for them. You don't need much variety. The white and pink, the pure white, the daybreak pink and lavender are the desired shades. A night temperature of 48 to 50 degrees suits sweet peas in winter time.

WITH BOSTON GROWERS.

Farquhar & Co., Roslindale.

R. & J. Farquhar & Co. have a very compact greenhouse plant and nursery at Roslindale, about eight miles from their seed store. In addition they have an additional forty acres at Sharon for growing stock and seed testing. The greenhouses are roomy and stock of all kinds looks well. Outdoors fine blocks of choice conifers were noted, including an extra fine lot of Picea pungens, Sciadopitys verticillata, retinosporas in variety, thuyas, etc. Rhododendrons looked well and were well budded. Large quantities of all the more popular hardy herbaceous perennials are grown, an increasing demand for them being noted.

Indoors one large house is devoted to palms, kentias predominating. All looked well. Araucarias, Boston ferns and the variety Piersoni and small ferns for dishes are grown in quantity. Gloire de Lorraine begonia has always been well done here; thousands of plants varying from those in 8-inch and 10-inch pans to cuttings just potted were noted, and all had a luxuriant appearance. Plants to retail in flower at $1 are the most in demand. Cyclamens are largely grown and are good sellers. Dahlias in all the best imported varieties are to be seen in thousands in frames, making nice pots of tubers. Grape vines such as Muscat of Alexandria, Black Hamburg, Madresfield Court and other popular forcing kinds are grown in hundreds. Messrs. Farquhar find an increasing demand for these and now grow their own canes instead of importing at fancy prices. What attracted our attention most, however, was the house of Farquhar's Christmas lily (Lilium Philippense). This is a wonderfully beautiful and graceful lily and will make a sensation when introduced in 1905.

W. W. Edgar, Waverley.

W. W. Edgar, of Waverley, is one of the best plantsmen supplying the Boston market. At Easter time especially his establishment is the Mecca for buyers of well-grown plants. Nephrolepis Bostoniensis is seen in various sizes, many of specimen size. Piersoni is grown, but is not found as good a seller as the Boston fern. Palms are gradually being dropped, a batch of Livistona rotundifolia being the last to be carried. Two large span houses are planted with adiantums. A large part of one house is devoted to Adiantum tenerum. The handsome fronds of this variety command excellent prices. We noted a specimen plant and many seedlings of a distinct adiantum named Edgarense, in the way of cuneatum, but even better, we thought, commercially. One house is devoted to Asparagus Sprengeri, for which there is a constant demand. Genistas, Acacia armata, Lorraine begonia, Cypripedium insigne, poinsettias and cyclamen are grown in quantity. The earliest Lilium Harrisii were in pots in frames. About 10,000 chrysanthemums are grown, the favorites being Lady Fitzwygram, Bonnaffon, Polly Rose, Ivory, Shrimpton and Eaton. Everything about Mr. Edgar's place was neat.

E. N. Peirce & Co., Waltham.

A ten minutes' walk through Waverley Oaks brings one to the large plant of E. N. Peirce & Co., who are the largest growers in the immediate vicinity of Boston. We were especially fortunate in finding the senior member of the firm at home, whence he had come to take part in the G. A. R. encampment. Mr. Peirce's ancestors settled near the present location of his greenhouses in 1630, and from that time to this all have been farmers, and many have shouldered muskets in the various wars in which the United States has been engaged. Elestra Nye Peirce enlisted as a minute man in the Fifth Massachusetts (Minute Men) April 15, 1861, rising to the rank of lieutenant and serving until February 11, 1865. He was thrice wounded during the war. He now holds a number of prominent posts in connection with various branches of the G. A. R. Although a full-fledged military man, his neighbors still dub him "Farmer Peirce."

The Waverley farm is now largely under glass, tomatoes only being grown as an outdoor crop. Lorillard is the only variety grown in quantity and is used exclusively indoors, a number of large houses being planted with them after carnations are pulled out; 17,000 are also grown on wire frames outdoors. At the time of our visit tomatoes were being pulled out and their places taken by carnations. A new 300-foot house was being planted with 7,000 Enchantress—big, handsome plants. Walls of concrete support all the benches, and tiles instead of board planks are used for the bottoms. Some 50,000 carnations are grown in all. Lawson still leads in its color, but Mr. Peirce thinks Nelson Fisher is a good thing, although he considers the two very much alike. For white, Boston Market is the favorite; Wolcott split too badly. A batch of 2,000 Lady Bountiful is being tried and a similar number of Mrs. M. A. Patten. Mr. Peirce has strong hopes of Judge Hinsdale, although the stock looks less promising than other sorts. "The boys" are dabbling in seedling raising, and one bright scarlet with stem and flower like Crane and Lawson habit was very promising.

Chrysanthemums are largely grown here, a number of 300-foot houses being devoted to them. The annual cut is about 75,000. Only a few sorts are grown. These include Mme. Bergmann, Ivory, Polly Rose, Glory of Pacific, Bonnaffon, A. G. Balfour, Eaton, Mrs. Murdock, Mrs. Coombes, Shrimpton and Western King. A batch of 50,000 Lilium Harrisii were potted for Christmas trade. For Easter another 50,000 are grown. A similar number of spiræas are grown for Decoration day trade. Asparagus Sprengeri is pronounced a good money maker. Several houses are planted with it. Lily of the valley was grown the past season, but will be dropped.

A track system for moving pot plants, compost, etc., is in service in all houses. The establishment includes a complete carpenter and blacksmith shop. All piping and greenhouse building is done by employes, superintended by "the boys," one of whom is a thorough mechanic. After trying houses with both long and short spans to the house, Mr. Peirce thinks an even span suits him about the best, although he cannot quite have such on his side hill. The establishment of E. N. Peirce & Co. is a good example of indoor "farming" and a credit to its founder. W. N. Craig.

TAKING THE BUDS.

Please let me know which buds to take, and when, on the following varieties: Chadwick, Merry Christmas, Golden Beauty, October Sunshine, Eaton, Appleton, Mrs. Jerome Jones, Ivory, White Bonnaffon and Robinson?

J. A. K.

The first bud that J. A. K. can see on his plants is now perfectly safe to take and will develop all right. When we get into September there is no longer any fear of taking buds too early, any buds, whether crown or terminal, coming perfect. If J. A. K. wishes to keep Merry Christmas and Chadwick for late flowers he can do so by waiting for the terminal buds. The bud question was discussed at length in a very recent issue. Brian Boru.

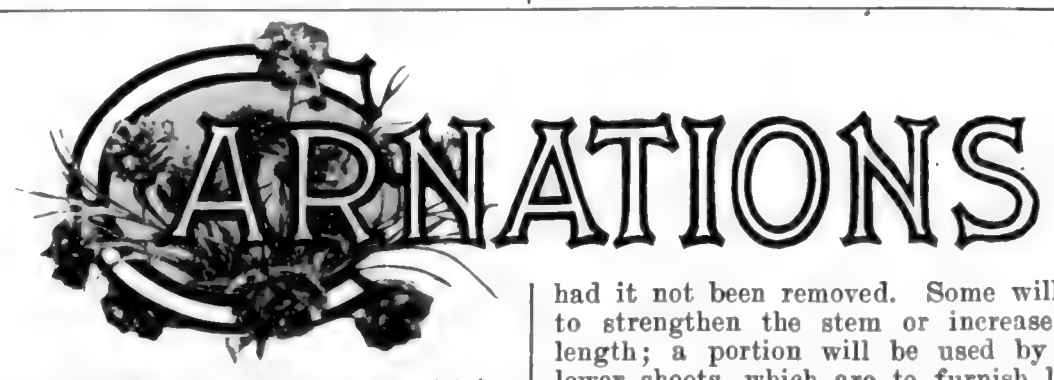
SOME NOVELTIES.

"Coming events cast their shadows before," and the shadows that are already being cast by the growth of some of the novelties are sufficient to indicate that there will be some fun by and by. The chief charm of the chrysanthemum is its infinite variety and, as the years roll around, each with its quota of new kinds added to the list, we have a variety, both in form and colors, that is unapproached by any other species of flowering plant. The Wells-Pockett varieties will naturally occupy first place in the list, as the adaptibility of their predecessors leads us to conclude that the present list will be equally useful. There are eight varieties in the Wells list, seven of which we are testing, as follows: Dora Stevens, J. H. Doyle, Merstham Red, Merstham Yellow, Mrs. H. A. Allen, Mrs. J. A. Miller and Mrs. W. Duckham.

Dora Stevens is a magnificent grower, as heavy as Cobbold in foliage, and in its color, a rosy cerise, will undoubtedly rank high.

J. H. Doyle is also a very strong grower, classed as a terra cotta in color. It is making a very fine growth in pots, boxes and on the bench and probably will be the king of the set, as it won the gold medal in Melbourne from thirteen competitors.

Merstham Red and Merstham Yellow are almost identical in growth, with a dwarf, very neat habit and showing not the slightest trace of disease. Merstham Yellow is similar to Mrs. T. W. Pockett, but more massive. It will possibly be too early for an exhibition flower, but one can hardly tell the first year, as it takes many kinds two years to settle down and adapt themselves to the changed conditions of a new climate.



Mrs. H. A. Allen is also of dwarf, strong habit and as a reflexed pink will find a prominent place. Pinks are Wells' strong point. Last year we received three from this source, Duckham, Filkins and Cobbold, all of them very fine, as the shows will later on bear witness, and as private advices report Mrs. H. A. Allen as being an immense flower I look for a record breaker in this variety.

Mrs. W. Duckham reminds me much of Alice Byron, with its dwarf, sturdy foliage and neat, clean growth. Its raiser states that it is a great improvement on Cheltoni, that it is identical in form, but much deeper in color. It may be a better color, though it seems hard to believe that any variety could improve much on Cheltoni in its form, habit or general excellence.

There are many varieties on hand from other sources, one of which, Mrs. S. Shaw, is a bronze sport from Mrs. E. Thirkell. It shows the same small, insignificant foliage as Thirkell, but let not the gentle reader who may happen to be growing Thirkell for the first time imagine from its appearance that it is not worth much. Thirkell can be grown large enough to beat any yellow in cultivation today, and its bronze sport will be assured of a large sale on that account alone. Brian Boru.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Disbudding.

The term disbudding is used in reference to the removal of all surplus growth from the flower stem, whether it be young shoots or buds. It might be generally supposed the only advantage to be gained by the operation would be the increase in size of bloom, but, though this gain alone is sufficient to warrant its being done, there are other benefits to be derived from the practice. It is well to consider these that we may fully realize the importance of carrying this work on at all times.

In no case is it possible for the main bud to take on all the growth that would have been made in the surplus growth had it not been removed. Some will go to strengthen the stem or increase its length; a portion will be used by the lower shoots, which are to furnish later blooms. The remainder, not used by the main bud, is either stored up as a reserve or increases the vigor of the whole plant.

Of course the increase in stiffness or length of stem would hardly be noticed in some varieties and to me is not of such importance as the saving of energy or increase of vigor. It is desirable to make a comparison between disbudded plants and those from which no growth is removed by allowing a few plants to grow at will. By daily observation the advantages referred to can be readily seen.

If disbudding is delayed too long there will be no increase in size of flower, but it does not follow that the earlier it is done the larger will be the bloom; in fact, if buds are removed before they can be readily taken off, injury to stem or foliage is apt to result. Both hands are needed in the work, one to grasp the stem, the other to remove the bud by a side pull.

Some of the varieties recently sent out require less disbudding than was the case with older sorts. Perhaps in a few years disbudding will be unnecessary except in some varieties. This would not be surprising when we consider the rapid strides that have been made in carnation culture during the past few years.

Tobacco Stems.

For the benefit of P. & P., who inquired last week as to the fertilizing qualities of tobacco stems, the following comparison is given, although, of course, stems vary somewhat:

Stable manure contains ten parts nitrogen, tobacco stems forty-seven; stable manure contains six parts phosphoric acid, tobacco stems fourteen; stable manure contains thirteen parts potash, tobacco stems 120.

It is generally advised to rot the stems in soil in preference to reducing to ashes. GEO. S. OSBORN.

CATTLEYA GASKELLIANA.

Several orchid importers are advertising, just at present, newly imported plants of this fine cattleya and our illustration presents a well flowered plant carrying some twenty-seven or twenty-eight flowers. C. Gaskelliana is grown in quantity at Florham Farms, Madison, N. J., and I am indebted to Mr. Herrington for taking the picture. A batch of several hundred plants of this variety was a handsome sight in June and well worth seeing.

C. Gaskelliana comes from Venezuela and, though slightly paler generally than the type of labiata, is still very beautiful. Personally I always found it very free flowering and easy to handle. It is generally classified as flowering in August and September, but I have never been able to keep established plants back later than July, owing, I presume, to the bright sunlight and warmth of early summer. After flowering the plants often make a blind growth in September or later, but this does not deter them from breaking out strongly shortly after the new year. Grown in a basket suspended from the roof, kept well watered in the spring and not too heavily shaded, C. Gaskelliana flowers well and grows and increases wonderfully year after year. It deserves a place in the front rank as an all-round useful cattleya.

CHAS. H. TOTTY.

BEGONIA REX.

I have about 200 Begonia Rex with good, strong root, which send forth leaves, some growing to be a good size, then begin to curl, turn brown at the edges and drop off. I have them in my propagating house, which is on the north side of the rose house. Could it be possible the fumigation of the roses causes this trouble? L. L. B.

We have never noticed that ordinary fumigation with tobacco hurt the begonias, but a strong dose may injure them. They don't need fumigation and if you can't give them a bench where there is no need of tobacco smoke, then cover thoroughly with newspapers when you have occasion to fumigate. If you find this isn't the trouble, then remove all the soil that will shake off without losing any roots and repot, using one part leaf-mold, one part well rotted manure and two parts fresh light loam. Put them in a shaded house. Although they need no spraying or wetting of the leaves, they like a moist atmosphere.

EUCHARIS AMAZONICA.

Although little seen now in our American flower markets, Eucharis Amazonica is a most excellent florists' flower, flowering as it does twice or thrice a year with a minimum of care if given anything like rational treatment.

Those who may have a piece of bench where they can command a brisk bottom heat could secure two or three crops of flowers a year by drying the plants off some time before a crop is needed. If a spare bench is not at command, pot culture may be tried with good results. Our illustration shows a plant shown before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society on August 13 by Henry Wild, gardener to Mrs. A. W. Blake, Brookline, Mass., which carried thirty-one spikes of flower and was awarded a silver medal for superior culture. Mr. Wild stated that the same plant carried a heavy crop of flowers last February, also that he had plants in both shady and sunny houses and that all flowered equally well. For design work eucharis flowers have no superior and the spikes are very effective for room decoration. W. N. CRAIG.

The following cultural notes are supplied by Henry Wild, of the A. W. Blake estate, Brookline, Mass.:

"In repotting eucharis, which is about once in three years, we wash all the soil away with the hose. The smaller bulbs are taken out and potted quite thickly in 8-inch pots. After being grown along for nine months, a top dressing of bone, cow manure and loam is given. When the roots push through, the plants are fed right along until they flower. As soon as the flowers are cut the plants are repotted, and in some cases placed in tubs, three pots to a tub. The compost used is a mixture of coarse loam, cow manure, bone meal, charcoal and sand. A porous compost is desirable.

"Two waterings of lime are given during the year to keep the soil sweet. In repotting the plants, all possible fine soil is shaken from the bulbs. The plants grown in tubs are rested during December and January, the syringe being used to keep the leaves from wilting and pests in check. The tub illustrated was made up of small bulbs potted with 8-inch pots four years ago. The first crop of flowers comes in February. An average night temperature in winter of 55 degrees is given."

DEATH OF DEAN HOLE.

The Rev. S. Reynolds Hole, dean of Rochester since 1887, and for many years president of the Rose Society of Great Britain, died August 27 of heart trouble, passing away while asleep.

Dean Hole was one of those genial clergymen not seldom found among the prelates of the Church of England who combine with thorough ecclesiastic ability and sincerity a wide capacity for the enjoyment of life. With all his fondness for outdoor life it was in his garden that he found his greatest pleasure and the successful cultivation of roses was the thing for which he was most widely known. His gardens at Rochester, near the cathedral, and at Caunton, where for many years he was curate, were filled to overflowing with roses which he loved and cared for as if they had been his children. In the preface to his "Book About Roses," which ran through eighteen editions and was translated several times, he said:

"I write this book about roses because having grown them for more than twenty years, having won more than thirty cups 'open to all England,' having originated the first rose show, and having at most of the subsequent exhibitions acted as judge or exhibitor, I ought to have something to say worth hearing to those who love the rose."

The dean was born in 1819 at Caunton, Nottinghamshire, and was educated at Newark-on-Trent and at Brasenose college, Oxford. He was ordained deacon in 1844, priest in 1845, and vicar in 1850. In 1885 he became chaplain to the archbishop of Canterbury, and a year later select preacher to the University of Oxford. In 1887 he assumed his duties as dean of Rochester.

STATE VICE-PRESIDENTS' REPORTS.

Taken in the aggregate these reports are so voluminous as to preclude their publication in full. There are, however, many points in them of such great value or interest as to warrant a careful consideration. The salient points of a number of the reports follow.

Western New York.

We can easily stand a little more glass. Western New York at present appears to me to be very attractive for the man who wants to invest in glass, especially if his capital is limited. There are many nice little towns which by themselves can afford to support good sized establishments, while any surplus can always be turned over to the stores or commission men in the next big city. Of transportation facilities there is no lack. These remarks about more greenhouses in western New York are not so much meant for the already large establishments, but I rather believe that many a smaller man or, better say, many a man with a small place, can safely increase his glass area. The small man has, and I think always will have, as good a chance to exist as the big fellow, as long as he produces good stuff. We all know it requires brains rather than money to successfully conduct a greenhouse, and just now I think western New York is as good a field as any in the United States.—Chas. H. Keitsch.

Southern Illinois.

I think it easy to account for the falling off in business in some wholesale commission markets since most all the large growers are selling their product direct to the retailer; in fact, it seems most growers are drifting that way, for which, in my opinion, no one is more to blame than the wholesaler himself for the careless way in which cut flowers are handled. In these times of strong competition, the retailer doing a first-class business must have first-class stock, and unless he receives it in first-class condition it is of little or no value to him. I am a grower and speak from a growers' standpoint. I do not approve of the grower selling direct to the retailer, as the wholesale man is our happy medium, and we both, grower and retailer, need him and should strive to protect him, but flowers should be handled as such and not like hay. There is some extensive building going on in and south of Peoria, which means more stock both in roses and carnations for the St. Louis market the coming season.—J. F. Ammann.

Western Massachusetts.

The novel business, which originated here in the beautiful Berkshire hills, of furnishing florists hardy supplies, has steadily increased for the last twenty-five years, until Hinsdale is known as the center for that line of goods, which are gathered from all the towns in the western part of the state, also from Vermont and New York, there being several hundred people employed in this line of industry, the goods being shipped to nearly every city in the country, there being six wholesale dealers besides many who are in it on a smaller scale. The business has become so extensive that certain parties thought it best to have the legislature pass a law prohibiting the gathering of anything unless a permit was obtained or the land was leased for that purpose. This law provides a punishment by imprisonment of not more than six months, or by a fine of not more than $500.—L. B. Brague.

Connecticut.

In July I sent out about fifty letters to the principal growers and dealers in the state, enclosing a question blank, the answering of which would enable me to present a comprehensive report to the society. The circular letter called the attention of the craft to the aims and purposes of our society and the good work already accomplished and also contained a cordial invitation to join the society, for which purpose I enclosed an application blank and a stamped addressed envelope. The result was twelve answers and one application. The answers were all alike, speaking in the highest terms of the prosperous year just passed, and encouragingly of the future, but for all the acknowledged prosperity, there was only one that was prosperous enough, or who considered himself so, to invest a five-dollar bill for membership in our national society.—Theodore Wirth.

Western Missouri.

The past year has been the most successful in the history of the business, all lines showing an increase of from twenty to twenty-five per cent. Many losses from hail occurred during the year. A few dollars invested on a policy in the F. H. A. is the only safeguard and in view of the complete protection afforded at such small cost it is surprising that anyone would be willing to assume such risks. The best indication of a healthy condition of business is the fact that nearly all growers are adding glass to their ranges. Many complaints are heard from those who purchased carnation cuttings of the new varieties disseminated by certain growers last season, as cuttings costing $10 or $12 per 100 arrived, in many cases, entirely worthless, being either weakly, poorly rooted or diseased. Such prices should obtain good stock.—GEO. M. KELLOGG.

Virginia.

During the past season business has been good in this state. Beauties, carnations and violets head the list of cut flowers. Palm stock is not moving as well as in former years. Lilies, when good, are still profitable and there is a steady demand for good Boston and Piersoni ferns. Paper White narcissus is grown in preference to the high priced Romans for funeral work. In all lines of bedding stuff the growers have cleaned out all on hand, but there could be improvement in this class of stock which would insure better returns for the grower.—H. BROWN.

Rhode Island.

The call for hardy plants and shrubs has been steadily increasing for some time and was felt in the bedding plant trade this spring. There is a very perceptible falling off in the bedding out of the usual plants that have been so extensively grown for the past few years, and an increase in the use of nasturtiums and other annuals. The custom of putting carnation plants into the houses earlier in the fall has been growing, until they now plant them in the house in the spring instead of outdoors. This is the most notable change I have observed in the growing of carnations for winter blooms. One large grower makes it a practice to set out his carnation plants in the field in the latter part of May, as early as he can, and some time from the first to the middle of June he sets them in the houses. If the success that he attains is due even in part to this manner of handling, it certainly is worthy of our imitation.—ROBERT W. GREENE.

Wisconsin.

The plant growers had an extra demand for bedding stock, and a number were cleaned out long before the season ended, especially on S. A. Nutt geranium and coleus. In cut flowers, carnations have been produced in great numbers and at times the wholesale houses ceased to have pleasure in handling them. The same can be said of bulbous stock. The glut which usually occurs at certain seasons was an enormous one. Roses are the more fortunate among the cut flowers; they hold their own.—F. P. DILGER.

New Hampshire.

A large proportion of the growing in this state has been done by the retailer, though we are now witnessing a very marked increase in the amount of glass devoted to wholesale growing. In Nashua a large vegetable grower is this year devoting his entire place to the growing of pinks and chrysanthemums. This gentleman is planting his stuff in the ground, doing away with benches entirely. This is a departure which will be watched with much interest. The state college has erected a range of glass during the past year, which will be used principally for experimental purposes. This will come to be appreciated by the growers of the state because of the opportunity which will be afforded to study the diseases of our greenhouse plants, and the best methods of treating the same.—E. R. SHAW.

Central Michigan.

From reports I find that the business has increased about twenty-five per cent, and very bright prospects ahead. But I should judge the building will not be over half what it was last year, more attention being paid toward improving the quality of stock grown. Carnation growing has increased to a very large degree and I think when the advantages of our climate are known this branch will receive more attention.—W. C. COOK.

North Carolina.

The high price of cotton the past year has brought prosperity to our farming people but, strange as it may seem, has had a bad effect on the local florist who expected to sell plants in the mill towns, as the high price of cotton has had the effect of running most of the factories on half time; that meant short cash and no luxuries for the people. But on the whole the year's work has been satisfactory and a few report increase in trade.—JAS. M. LAMB.

Ohio.

We have had an exceptional era of prosperity in the season just closed. The demand for bedding stock has especially shown a marked increase over former years, due, I think, to the education of the working and the middle classes in the matter of home adornment. I feel that certain credit should be given for the increased demand in plants and shrubs to the education of the children and also of great numbers of indifferent adults, to appreciate the beauties of the floral kingdom through the expression of sentiment fostered and disseminated by that remarkable and patriotic institution, the Carnation League of America, reared in honor of a clean, upright and sentimental manhood, and which appropriately chose as the emblem of that sentiment, President McKinley's favorite flower, which was worn by over three millions of its members on January 29, 1904.—H. M. ALTICK.

Maine.

The year has been a good one on the whole. We were able to hold our prices up to a better standard than ever before, and so the result in the end has been very satisfactory. But the amount of building is not as large as usual this season. The Maine florists are not getting rich, but they are making some gains and are keeping well abreast of the demand for their goods in the state. A stronger feeling of union and co-operation among them and a larger membership in this society would be both pleasant and beneficial.—H. R. MITCHELL.

New Jersey.

The standing of New Jersey as a horticultural state is interesting. In the number of square feet of glass surface, New Jersey stands fifth in the Union, exceeded only by New York, Illinois, Pennsylvania and Ohio. In value of greenhouse structures it stands forth. In proportion to size, population, and wealth it easily takes first rank among the states in commercial floriculture. Here the growing of roses in large quantities for cut flowers was developed from an early small beginning, and the lead has been steadily maintained until the present time. Taking Chatham, in Morris county, as a centre, within a radius of four miles we find the principal home of the industry, including Madison in the same county, and Summit and Murray Hill in the adjoining county of Union. About fifty growers about Madison tells the story of a locality, small in area but great in the production of the queen of flowers. A fair number of carnations of good quality are also produced in the state. Violets are no longer grown here for market, owing to the diseases which have overtaken them. There are several extensive plant factories. The past year has not come up to the average in profit to the grower and we hear of some going out of business and of fewer "butting in." Horticultural builders are not experiencing altogether a jolly time at present because of the plethoric pocketbooks of the growers. Economy with discretion has become the watchword of growers and a period of conservative action on their part seems to have arrived. The fellow who brags of the big pile he has made has not shown up this season. But as some of the causes which have brought a feeling of depression to florists, particularly the growers, are not likely to prevail another year, a looking forward for a better year coming is general.—W. B. Du Rie.

Louisiana.

In the southern part of our country, where many plants grow to perfection outdoors and where roses and other flowers bloom almost the entire year around, demand for plants has been as good as anywhere up north and therefore it was not easy for the gardener to get overstocked. This is an ideal climate for palms and almost any variety can be grown outdoors with slight protection against the hottest rays of the midday sun. Phœnix, chamerops, Washingtonias, sabals, cocos and even latanias and arecas may be grown in full sun and attain a fine, healthy color. It would take two and three years of careful nursing under glass up north to get palms to that perfection which can be done here in one year and our plants are much hardier and stouter and, above all, free from insects and fungous diseases. A good deal of interest has been taken in chrysanthemums and some of the best varieties were grown to as good perfection here as anywhere up north and proved a well paying crop to those that ventured in that undertaking. The cut flower trade has been pretty good during winter and early spring, but few home-grown flowers were sold by our florists, as the demand has been principally for northern roses, carnations, valley and other stuff, as we have no one that makes a specialty of growing any under glass, although the demand is large enough to induce the growing here. The general idea has been that it could not be done profitably here, but I think it could be made a success. Vegetable growing for shipping to northern markets has become quite an industry in lower Louisiana. In the early part of May, in two weeks' time, 37,000 barrels of cucumbers were shipped out of New Orleans. Grand Island and the section along Barrataria Bay produces the finest cauliflower in the United States. Cucumber forcing under glass is quite an item. A few are grown in frames with horse manure to give the necessary temperature, but the best are raised in special houses heated by hot water and prove to be a well-paying crop. There is an immense demand for Louisiana hothouse cucumbers during the months of January, February and March and prices are better than can be realized for any other crop or truck. Horticulture has certainly a future in Louisiana.—Harry Papworth.

Kansas.

Trade in cut flowers was good the past winter, the demand greater than the supply. Trade was also good in plants. There is some greenhouse building this year, and I think there will be more next year.—A. H. Whitcomb.

Kentucky.

From answers to a circular letter sent out the latter part of June, I learn that trade has been on the increase, some reporting a twenty-five per cent increase for the year. New glass is going up everywhere and, while no very large additions are being made, there is enough to exhibit a healthful business condition. —S. M. Harbison.

Alabama.

The season just closing has seen remarkable progress in all branches of our trade, the call being generally for the finest quality of cut flowers. Where a few years ago our citizens were content to spend a few cents, they now spend dollars, and it is with great satisfaction I note that as soon as a new home is completed the next step is to beautify the grounds. The sale of palms and ferns is enormous, with prices far in advance of those received by our friends in the north, east and west. Our state motto, "Here We Rest," does not apply to our profession.—Amy K. Luffman.

Western Michigan.

In consequence of the increased demand for plants and cut flowers beyond the present glass capacity of the growers, large additions are being built at the old places and many new ones are going up. To this can be added the number of old plants that are being torn down and rebuilt along modern lines, which all attests the healthy, prosperous condition of the trade in Michigan. Michigan is noted for its violets. The past season was not a very favorable one, on account of the extreme low prices, yet they are being more extensively planted this year than ever.—Geo. F. Crabb.

CHARLEROI, PA.

The Review has been a great help to me in my business. I started four years ago without any experience whatever. I had two hot-bed sashes at that time and have now 2,000 square feet of glass in greenhouses, having built it out of the profits of the business. Trade was very good here last spring, everything being sold out by Decoration day. There are four of us in business here, with about 30,000 feet of glass. Trade is dull at present, nothing doing but getting things in shape for fall, when we expect a good demand. Jos. Haube.

PLAN FOR HEATING.

Last season I propounded some heating queries to the Review and you kindly offered to supply a plan for heating my range. I did not get it then, because there was a florist here from Chicago who said he could save me considerable money. His plan was to build a brick furnace and put in several coils of 2-inch pipe. It took a lot of coal and as much if not more work than a steam boiler, without giving as much heat as we needed in the coldest weather. Now we shall have to tear it out and try again.

I have three houses, running east and west, the south house 20x100, the middle one 18x100, the next 22x100. These are separated by four-foot partition walls. The south wall is two and one-half feet high, the north five feet. The gables are glass. The south house is twenty-three feet over the glass, used for carnations and 52 degrees required when it is as cold as 20 and 30 degrees below zero outside. The second house is divided by a partition across at the middle, the west end without benches and used for cool stock; 40 to 45 degrees will do here. The north house is partitioned twenty-four feet from the east end and is twelve feet to ridge. The larger section has both solid beds and benches, for roses. The small section is for plants and requires about 55 degrees. At the northwest corner is the office. Back of this is a house 12x24 for palms, and back of this, about midway of the plant, is the boiler room. I believe I would prefer hot water, as the place is hardly large enough for a night man. We use soft coal. W. H. S.

Your plant requires a boiler capable of supplying heat to 2,000 feet of radiation, which is not a large amount to be carried by a single boiler. The arrangement of the partitions in the houses in reference to the location of the boiler house or furnace room renders the piping of the plant somewhat difficult. With hot water it will be somewhat more complicated and difficult to handle than with steam, but there is no reason why hot water should not be made to accomplish the result desired.

It will be necessary to have a deep boiler pit, so that the crown of the boiler may be two feet or more below the floor in the south house. For this house a 3-inch flow pipe will be required. It should extend from the boiler along the line of the partition in the middle house to a point directly under the ridge in the south house, where it may be carried to the ridge and from there allowed to drop toward each end of the house, using a 2-inch pipe under the ridge in each direction from the Establishment of A. Jablonsky in Course of Erection at Wellston, Mo.

3-inch upright. At each end of the house divide the 2-inch pipe into three 2-inch pipes, one to follow the slope of the roof to the south bench and there divide to supply three 2-inch pipes placed under this bench, which shall extend to the center of the house and there, by a header, be collected into one. The wide benches should each have a 2-inch supply pipe dividing to supply three 2-inch returns under each. These should then be united by a header and all finally collected into a 2½-inch return pipe which should return to the boiler.

The west end of the middle house can be piped by hanging four 2-inch pipes on the north wall and three on the south wall, and feeding all from a 2-inch flow pipe under the ridge. The east end should have a 2-inch riser under the ridge, two 2-inch returns under each side bench and four 2-inch returns under the wide bench. On account of the cross walk through the middle of this section these pipes will have to be carried close to the ground. A 2½-inch riser should be brought from the boiler to a point under the ridge and there carried in an upright to supply the two 2-inch lines going to either end of the house.

The north house, the one twenty-two feet wide, is a little more difficult to pipe by this plan, but it may be done as follows: Bring a 3-inch riser to a point under the ridge and carry a 2-inch one to the west and a 2½-inch line to the east as far as the partition of the room 22x24 feet. At this point insert a tee with a 2-inch opening looking into the room 22x24 feet and another looking down on the west side of the partition. From each carry a 2-inch line, the one in the east section to return by two pipes under the north bench, three under wide bench farthest north, two under the other wide bench and one under the south narrow bench. The other section can be piped by carrying returns from each end of the compartment to the fifty-foot line, using the same number and disposition of pipes as in the house 22x24 feet. If you do not wish to use valves in the flow pipe so as to cut off the house 22x24 feet, both the riser and returns can be carried through without interruption and the size of the riser from the fifty-foot line east need not be increased; a 2-inch line in each direction will be sufficient.

The little house between the office and boiler house requires 184 feet of 2-inch pipe. It should have four lines of 2-inch pipe under the north bench and four lines under the wide bench. A 2-inch line under the ridge will supply both coils.

With such a plant to be run with hot water and soft coal fuel I should advise the use of a steel boiler with jacketed fire box, i. e., inside the shell with water all around and with large return tubes. There are many boilers of this pattern on the market. L. C. C.

STEAM DOME UNNECESSARY.

A boiler is better without the steam dome, says the Practical Engineer. The steam dome is supposed to effect a drying of the steam and also add to the steam space of the boiler. Both of these purposes it certainly performs, so that it cannot be objected to upon the grounds of inefficient service. In the first place, it removes the outlet of the steam to a greater distance from the water surface and consequently there is less chance of carrying water over when the boiler primes slightly. Being of comparatively large cross-section, the velocity of the steam passing through it on the way to the outlet is comparatively slow. This gives the moisture particles entrained with the steam an opportunity to fall out of the steam by mere action of gravity. However, there are other and better ways of securing the same result. The dry pipe is just as useful in obtaining dry steam as is the dome. It is merely a perforated pipe attached to the outlet, but lying wholly within the boiler. The areas of the perforations when taken together are considerably greater than that of the steam main leading from the boiler. The dry pipe is usually placed so as to extend along the upper part of the steam space and parallel to the longitudinal axis of the boiler shell. It thus draws steam from a large portion of the steam space.

Its main advantage over the dome, however, lies in the fact that its attachment to the boiler does not weaken the shell to any appreciable extent. In order to attach a dome, the shell of the boiler beneath the dome is cut away, thus removing a large amount of solid plate, making the boiler considerably weaker under the transverse strains.

I HAVE been pleased with the REVIEW during the past year and could not well afford to be without it.—JOHN W. SCOTT, Lisbon, O.

COLUMBIA, S. C.—Martin Stork, of the Rose Hill Greenhouses, says the florists' business in this state is still in its infancy, but judging from the increasing demands for cut flowers from all sections of the state, it is plain that it is no longer an experiment. Greenhouses are being built and enlarged in a number of the smaller towns.

LETTUCE AND RADISH.

At what time should Grand Rapids lettuce be sown to get a crop by November 20? What is the best method of culture? What is a good forcing radish?

J. H. T.

Grand Rapids lettuce takes from ten to twelve weeks from time of sowing the seed until they are large enough to be most profitable to cut, so if you want them at November 20, the sooner you get the seed in the better. For cultural hints see the answer to E. C. L. in the issue of the REVIEW of August 25. In addition to this I would advise to sow the seed rather thinly in flats or cold frame and prick over once before the final planting, setting them about two inches apart each way. Before the plants begin to crowd one another plant out where they are to mature, allowing a space of eight inches each way.

The best forcing radish we have tried is Non Plus Ultra. This is a dwarf, quick maturing variety and one that has always succeeded well with us.

HOUSES FOR CUCUMBERS.

Different types of houses are utilized in the growing of cucumbers. Market gardeners who raise two or three crops of lettuce during the fall and winter generally plant cucumbers in their lettuce houses in late winter or early spring. These lettuce houses are almost invariably either two-thirds or even-span, and in Massachusetts they are provided with ground beds instead of benches. They are glazed with 16x24 or 16x28-inch glass, and in some of the modern houses 20x30-inch glass is used. The use of this larger glass results in giving a house considerably more light, thus increasing growth. A house glazed with 20x30-inch glass requires only five sash bars to cover a space demanding six sash bars where 16x24 or 16x28-inch glass is used, and the inferior light conditions due to more frequent lapping are avoided.

A modern even-span lettuce house 40x630 feet, constructed with 20x30-inch glass is known to have cost $952 per lineal foot or 23 cents per square foot of ground covered. According to our estimate a house of this size, if constructed with sash bars two inches wide, would by the use of 16-inch glass furnish about 745 square feet more opaque surface, than if glazed with 20-inch glass; or in other words there would be about nineteen per cent. less sash bar surface to obstruct light in this house if glazed with 20x30-inch glass than if glazed with 16x24-inch glass. There would also be an improvement in the light conditions owing to the less frequent lapping required by the larger glass.

That this increase in the amount of light is of great advantage in the growing of such crops as cucumbers and lettuce under glass in winter there is no doubt. It has long been known to vegetable physiologists that, where the light conditions fall below the normal requirements of the plant, increasing the amount or intensity of the light by artificial means, such as the use of electricity, etc., considerably accelerates the process of assimilation. It is, indeed, not difficult to observe practical and conclusive demonstrations of the positive beneficial effects which superior light conditions have upon such crops as lettuce and cucumbers in greenhouses. Many experiments have been made by the writer which show this.

The most common type of house used is shown in figure 1. This house is especially built for cucumber growing and would not be adapted to lettuce. Houses of this type are furnished with beds containing about one foot of soil, in which is usually buried 2-inch porous tile for use in subirrigation. This type of house is usually fifteen to twenty-three feet in width and from 100 to 200 feet in length. Many of these houses are provided with two layers of glass throughout, a space of one and a half or two inches being left between the layers. Small ventilators are placed near the top of the roof but seldom on the sides. Some of these houses are built with heavy wooden frames which, together with the small and inferior glass frequently used, results in rendering light conditions too poor for the production of healthy plants or large crops. The outer row of plants is trained to follow up the sides and roof, and, when the house is eighteen to twenty-three feet in width, one or more rows are planted through the middle. The middle rows are necessarily more shaded and invariably prove of little value as crop producers in double glass houses. The house from which the illustration was prepared is 20x106 and cost $16.03 per lineal foot or 80 cents per square foot of ground covered.

The style of house shown in figure 2 is less frequently devoted to cucumbers, but occasionally such houses are made use of for that purpose. It is, however, a typical lettuce house, the highest side being boarded. The method of training the plants is shown in the illustration and is different from that practiced in regular cucumber houses.

This method of training is generally adopted in houses of this type. The house in which the sketch was made is 36x200 and cost $10 per lineal foot or 27 cents per square foot of ground covered.

The cheapest and most economical house to build and operate in the production of cucumbers is an even-span or two-thirds-span house of large dimensions, such as is most frequently used by lettuce growers. The construction, heating and management of a large house are proportionally cheaper than of a small house. It is a significant fact that the largest and most satisfactorily built and best lighted house which we have seen cost the least per lineal and square foot. If a side hill with a southern slope were available, an economical house well lighted and easily heated could be built at probably still cheaper rates.

In conclusion it may be stated that the most important features brought out here are that a large house costs less per unit of structure than a small house. The cost of operating the same is proportionally less. The cost of production is less in a large house than in a smaller one, and it would be more economical to manage one large house 40x300 feet than three small ones 20x200 feet having the same total area. From various observations which have been made on greenhouses, it is evident that cucumber growers have in many instances shown a lack of thought and business ability in the construction of their houses, whereas lettuce and rose growers, who are subject to more competition in their business, are continually making use of the best materials and principles in greenhouse construction and management.—George E. Stone in bulletin of Hatch Experiment Station.

The Market.

There is not much new to chronicle for the past week's market. Roses are coming of somewhat better quality. They include some very good Carnot and Kaiserin from a number of growers. The best bring about $6 per 100. Beauties are rather more plentiful. In addition to Worcester Conservatories, the Waban Consevatories, Anderson and Williams and one or two others are sending in good blooms. Prices range from $6 to $18. Brides and Bridesmaids seldom fetch over $2. A good many of the poorer grades are handled by the fakirs.

Carnations from the new indoor crop are now arriving from several growers. Some nice outdoor stock is also coming in. The best sell at $2 and $2.50. Gladioli are quite plentiful and still sell at $2 to $3. Lily of the valley brings $2 to $4. Asters are very poor, many being badly spotted. Demand for asparagus, adiantum and smilax is light.

Weekly Exhibition.

The last of the free weekly flower shows at Horticultural Hall occurred on August 27. There was not a very large display of flowers, but the fruit and vegetable classes drew fine displays. For collection of fifty vases of asters in not less than twelve varieties, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher gardener, and W. J. Clemson, J. O. Kristenson gardener, won in order named. Two fine collections of thirty varieties of hardy herbaceous plants were staged. Carl Blomberg was first and Walter Hunnewell, T. D. Hatfield gardener, second.

W. G. Winsor showed over sixty varieties of cactus dahlias. The blooms were very fine. Mrs. L. Towle also had a fine collection. E. S. Wheeler showed a collection of seedling gladioli, Mrs. E. M. Gill a general display and L. H. Atkins a table of flowers grown in an apartment house yard, the latter receiving honorable mention. About 150 varieties of fungi containing edible, poisonous, deleterious and "unknown quality" sorts were staged.

The next regular exhibition is the big autumn show of flowers, plants, fruits and vegetables September 22 to 25. A splendid exhibition, which will fill all halls, is expected.

Various Notes.

George Anderson, of Hyde Park, and Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Canning and family, of Northampton, Mass., were among the passengers returning on the S. S. Ivernia, on August 24.

The new flower market under Music Hall is in the hands of a contractor, who hopes to have it completed early in September. The new location is very central and has ample floor space. It unfortunately has a serious defect in lack of light. There are no windows at all, and the only daylight comes from the entrance doors, making artificial light a necessity at all times. The facilities for teams approaching the entrance are also not of the best. We wish the new market a prosperous career, for they undoubtedly have the well-wishes of a large clientele. We honestly believe, however, that a location nearer the South Terminal station would have been more convenient and better in many ways. The auction sale of stalls in the new market occurs on August 31, that in the Columbus avenue market taking place on September 3.

Prize lists containing all prizes offered by or through the Massachusetts Horticultural Society at the coming chrysanthemum and rose shows will be issued in a few days.

John K. M. L. Farquhar sailed for Europe on the S. S. Ivernia on August 30. He will visit Great Britain, Holland, Belgium, France and Germany in the interest of his firm. He carried over in cold storage a box of blooms of Farquhar's new Christmas lily to show to London experts. He will return about the middle of October.

W. E. Doyle had a nice lot of Clerodendron Balfouri in the window of his Boylston street store the past week.

BUFFALO.

Washington is Popular.

Since our return from St. Louis we find that all our brother florists are well pleased with Washington for next year's convention, and the boys of the capital can rest assured that it will be a rousing, old-time convention. If we remember aright, the first Washington convention was a "buster" in every respect. We promise to be Gude-Gude boys, while all being Freemen in our actions.

A Grand Gladiolus.

Business for the past two weeks has been well up to the average of this dullest of seasons. Carnations are scarcely visible. Sweet peas are getting poor and roses are at their lowest ebb, except Kaiserins and some Beauties. Asters and gladioli are now the staples. Speaking of gladioli, we received a hundred spikes a few days ago from Frank Banning, of Kinsman, Ohio, of a light, soft pink variety named Reuben H. Warder. We think we have seen a good many gladioli in our time, but never, assuredly, have we ever seen such a flower as this. In color, in stoutness of spike and in size and substance of flowers it is wonderful. It simply eclipses all varieties we ever saw. We are told by George Asmus, of Chicago, that when Reuben H. Warder appears in the Chicago market it is fought for and obtains a high price, and no wonder.

Florists' Club Picnic.

Last Thursday the Florists' Club held its annual outing. About 175 turned out. The place selected was a private club house on Grand Island, known as the Half-Past Twelve Club, of which W. F. Kasting is a member. We got off late and before we were far out on the billows of the usually calm but rapid Niagara, a small cyclone met us as it came up from the falls, and seldom has old Niagara put on more airs. The tug went plowing through, but the flat-bottomed scow that held most of the party rose and fell like a bottle-nosed whale and, besides producing that funny feeling in many, it put serious thoughts in others, men (particularly young sinners) as well as women, so much so that as soon as terra firma was reached, hurried preparations were looked up for a safer return. Very few, however, were allowed to leave the crowd. The rain stopped, the wind went down and a start was made to carry out the program of sports which had been carefully prepared. But two events were run, besides the ball game. The hundred-yard dash was won by Charlie Reickert, L. Longley, second, W. Greaver, third. In the ladies' race of fifty yards Mrs. Reickert was first and Mrs. J. Bailey second. All eyes were so intensely fascinated with the action and stride of the winner that no one was placed third. This race was known as the Grand Island Selling Stakes. The first prize was a bottle of whiskey, second a piano and third a baby carriage. Thinking that the ball game was of greater general interest, the east side lined up against the west and the east side won by a score of 8 to 1. The battery for the east was Johnnie Weiss and David Scott, for the west Roland Cloudsley and Robbie Scott, umpire W. F. Kasting. Some thought his decisions impartial, some thought he was horribly rank. He imposed many fines for disputed decisions and sass from the players and W. A. Adams was ejected from the grounds for all-round kicking and back talk.

Then came the inevitable camera, then a most enjoyable repast, marred only by the fact that we couldn't all sit down together. There was irrigation and fumigation in abundance. Then there was dancing. About 9 o'clock the whistle blew, the anchor weighed and "All aboard!" was the word. It's greatly to be deplored that the program could not be run off, but it's going to be. The Buffalo Florists' Derby would have caused much merriment, as it had a large entry list and each contestant had to carry on his back for seventy-five yards a man or boy weighing not less than 130 pounds.

Notwithstanding the subsidence of the storm, the comparative calm and the moon's soft light, a score of the young and nervous element hired hay racks and rode through the woods to the east side of the island to catch another steamer. Recollections of the flat-bottomed scow and fried chicken were too much for them and so they missed a most enjoyable part of the day's outing. An impromptu chairman installed himself and called upon many present for "a few remarks" or a little story from L. H. Neubeck, Wm. Eihmann, Wm. Hewson, C. H. Keitsch, Prof. Cowell, Mr. Collins, of Pine Hill; D. B. Long, Emil Brucker, George Troup, Rudolph Boettger and some others not intentionally omitted. Mr. Long spoke earnestly of the McKinley monument, to which it is the privilege of the florists to contribute $10,000 for its perpetual care. Mr. Long will make an excellent chairman to raise the local offering. George Troup, the able superintendent of our matchless Forest Lawn cemetery, took occasion to say that on his part there was not the slightest wish to infringe or curtail the business done by the florists in Forest Lawn. His first duty and service was to his charge, but he hoped that always would there be most pleasant relations between the superintendent and the florists and whatever he could do to promote that understanding would be his aim. W. S. told of his experience on the field of Chickamauga, when cared for by a colored family, and just then the scow bumped up against the landing place.

In conclusion I am instructed to say by several of those young men who rode through the dark woods on a hay rack, that as they had Mrs. Phil Hauswirth and Mrs. George Asmus, of Chicago, with them, they by no means envied anyone.

PAYS FOR MONEY ORDERS.

The Templin & Sons Co., of Calla, Ohio, last spring introduced a feature in their mail order business which was so convenient and satisfactory to their patrons that it would seem worthy of adoption by the seed and plant trade in general. They announced in their catalogue that the cost of every postoffice money order or express money order should be deducted from the amount sent them in ordering seeds, plants, etc., from them. The firm seems well pleased with the results, and will doubtless continue the same liberal offer in future.

T. S. T.

CRESCO, IA.—W. B. Perry says that the general report is that palms are slow sale with Iowa florists.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Semple's asters are the feature of the market this week. They are very fine and can be had in quantity in all the colors. That the buyers appreciate them is evidenced by the way they are selling. Most orders seem incomplete without a bunch or more of asters. Carnations from freshly planted stock are putting in their appearance. The Leo Niessen Co. has had some fragrant blooms of Flora Hill, Mrs. Lawson and Queen Louise. Dahlias, especially pompons, are becoming more plentiful. They are very nice blooms, but a trifle short in stem. There is a steady demand for fine valley. Tuberoses are in season now. They are not likely to be plentiful. Roses are very abundant and the ordinary grades are cheap, but selected stuff brings fair money for the season.

The Event of the Week.

The event of the week was the opening of the Flower Market on Monday morning. Their new quarters consist of a ground floor 30x60 feet, with the basement underneath. There are twenty-five stalls besides some floor and wall space rented. The office in front is very well lighted. Nearly all the stalls are rented. Being early in the season, about half the growers were represented on the opening day. The location is unsurpassed from a business standpoint, being only one square away from each of the two great railway terminals. Manager Meehan is making preparations for an active campaign during the coming season.

A Clever Contrivance.

It is a privilege to be admitted to the sanctum of a successful business house. It was Phil's good fortune, one afternoon, to pass a too short half hour in the second story front rooms on lower Market street from which Johnson & Stokes conduct their seed business. A pleasant greeting from Walter P. Stokes was followed by an interesting chat, partly devoted to a device which Mr. Stokes has planned and carried out for photographing fruits, vegetables and flowers. His camera, with a short focused lens especially adapted for the work, stands on a frame set on casters, in front of the large window. Just in front of the camera, and connected with the frame, is a sort of easel on which the fruit or vegetable is placed with a background of light gray or dark green cloth, as best suits the coloring of the subject to be photographed. Should a flower be used, a frame with plate glass front skilfully arranged to hold the flower in place is added. The easel can be turned to any angle necessary to avoid or secure shadow, be it horizontal or perpendicular, the camera turning to suit. In a room back of the office the plates are developed, the ruby light being admitted softened to give just the strength desired. Some plates of fine melons were wonderful in their perfection of detail. Mr. Stokes is president of the amateur photographers' association. His work is of a high order and the firm is thus able to illustrate its catalogue with reproductions of the product of their own seed.

Ombre Effects.

Progress in combinations of colors and shades is most strikingly shown in the so-called ombre effects produced in chiffons, chip ribbons and pot covers. The gradual shadings from a deep to a pale tint of color and then to shades of another color that harmonize with the first are exquisite. The softness and beauty of these ombre effects will appeal to the taste of the flower artist at first sight. Another dainty effect is the fairy-like magnolia leaf. This appears to be simply a skeleton leaf; no tissue or sap left, only veins and stem, a graceful green wand that a breath of air will sway. Phil is indebted to the courtesy of M. Rice for a glimpse of these dainties.

Various Notes.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have their handsome and spacious warehouse crammed full of beautiful novelties and standards. Some new designs and colorings in Christmas bells are very pleasing. The firm has done a great business in the west lately.

William J. Moore, wholesale florist, has opened for business at 1235-37 Filbert street, where he is ready to see all his old friends.

Edward Reid is receiving some fine Semple's asters in all the popular colors.

Charles P. Poryzees has opened a new store on Fifteenth street, near Chestnut.

Samuel S. Pennock is enjoying an ideal out of door life in a camp in the Adirondacks.

Berger Bros. continue to receive good shipments of fine asters.

Pennock Bros. are displaying some beautiful pink cosmos.

H. Bayersdorfer and Mrs. Bayersdorfer have returned from Atlantic City.

Joseph Heacock has sent out a beautifully illustrated booklet, with photos of his place, his specimen kentias and in raised and colored figures his phones.

Wilmington.

N. D. Gachor, the well known Broad street station florist, declares that carnations are now the best paying flower. This statement is borne out by the building about Wilmington, Del. Nelson Tally has erected two houses, doubling his plant. C. H. Simon has added one house and H. M. Paschall, of Holly Oaks, nearby, has also added one house during the past summer. It is understood that all these houses are for carnations. All the growers named above ship their stock to the Leo Niessen Co.

PHIL.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Trade the past week has been reported extremely slow, but in looking through the stores one finds a little doing in all of them, and the proprietors in a good humor, so that it is not as bad as it might be. The stock on show in most of them looks very good for this season. Gladioli and asters are specially fine and roses are improving every day. Carnations are not in evidence at all, but with Harrisii, lancifolium lilies and valley they manage to make a good front and take care of any trade coming their way.

The nights being extremely cool have caused some mildewed stock to appear and the fellow who does not grow roses himself asks the old question, "Do those growers take care of stock all spring and summer, and then allow themselves to be caught napping in the fall; is it carelessness, or do they forget from year to year that their young roses will not stand the cold, damp nights?"

Various Notes.

A crowd of the Pittsburg and Allegheny florists took advantage of the Turners' excursion to Wheeling last Sunday. They took in the parks, ball games and visited their Wheeling friends and got home about midnight, after being held up by a passenger wreck on the B. & O.

There was a kind of harvest home out in Butler county one day last week. Some of the boys went out and all, with the exception of one who was left along the road, got back safely.

Karl Klinke, the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co.'s bookkeeper, is back from the World's Fair. He says he went to see it all, and thinks he did, especially the Pike. He says you are not saving money while in the hands of those fellows.

T. M. Ulam and wife have been spending a couple of weeks in the mountains.

Most of the larger growers have all their stock planted for the winter and are offering their surplus roses and carnations for sale.

Wm. Falconer went from the St. Louis convention to Chicago to attend the convention of the Society of American Cemetery Superintendents.

Frank Faulk, of the Allegheny market, is an expert taxidermist and when the cut flower business is dull he puts in his time mounting fine specimens of fish and birds for the sportsmen of this vicinity. He makes it pay as well as his regular business.

G. & J. W. Ludwig had a busy week with funeral work. Among the designs there was one in particular which was well executed, a scales of life, for which they received $125.

Ed. McGrath, of Breitenstein & Flemm, is visiting New York and Philadelphia.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. have Christmas bells on exhibition. It seems early for Christmas goods, but these boys usually know their business.

HOO-HOO.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Cooler weather the past week has improved stock and business somewhat. Shipping trade, too, seems to be revived at the wholesale houses. In fact the general outlook is very much better, though most of the business is confined to funeral work. On Saturday the floral parade at the World's Fair used up a lot of surplus outdoor stock, which is over-plentiful.

The cool nights have a bad effect on roses, which show traces of mildew. Kaiserin is the best. Meteor and Liberty are also good. Brides and Maids are very poor. Beauties are not first class and, on a limited number of good flowers, are being held at $2 to $2.50 per dozen, the average being worth only 75 cents to $1.25, with plenty of shorts at $5 per 100. Most of the flowers are poorly colored.

In carnations the market has a poor supply at present. The field-grown stock has suffered a great deal of late from the heavy rains. Fancy sorts bring $1.50 per 100, but the bulk sell at from 50 cents to $1 per 100. Asters have shortened in supply, that is, the fancy sorts. There seems to be plenty of common varieties for all demands. Tuberoses are in big supply, more than the trade can use up. All they bring is $2 per 100. Good long smilax and asparagus are plentiful.

Various Notes.

Most of the S. A. F. delegates have now left the city for home. Harry Papworth, of New Orleans, and A. H. Langjahr and wife, of New York, left Saturday. Robert Craig, of Philadelphia, and a few others are still holding out, taking in all the sights at the World's Fair before returning home.

Chas. C. Young has returned from Atlantic City, N. J., where he spent two weeks during his vacation.

Robert and Carl Beyer have had a busy week of it, arranging Lemp's park for the annual gathering of the St. Louis Schwabenverein, which opened Sunday. The decorations, including the large column of vegetables in different shapes, was a sight well worth seeing.

The general entertainment committee met at Frank Ellis' store on Thursday of last week to settle all bills for the convention. Treasurer Koenig was on hand with his checkbook and a full report can be made at the next regular meeting of the club.

Charlie Kuehn has laid in an extra fine lot of supplies of all kinds, especially in the basket line.

Frank Ellis is receiving daily a fine lot of asters and lily of the valley, which are selling well.

Henry Ostertag had twenty-two automobiles to decorate on Saturday for the floral parade at the World's Fair.

The Florists' Club meeting next Thursday afternoon, September 8, is of great importance to all the members. A full report is expected from all the chairmen of the convention committees, also the superintendent of trade display. The president has appointed ex-Presidents Ammann and Dunford to take charge of the installation ceremonies for the new officers. President-elect Juengel has a big surprise in store for the members when he takes his seat. He will be ably assisted this year by Vice-President Pilcher, Treasurer Meinhardt and the new trustees, Messrs. Weber, Guy and Miller. The only old officer holding office is Secretary Schray.

The display of McCray florists' refrigerators by the Standard Scale & Fixture Co., their representatives here, were the only ice boxes on exhibition in the trade display. They report a number of orders taken during the convention.

The reason our convention was such a great success is that we had the Lord with us, in fact two of them, J. P. Lord, of Lord & Burnham, and L. P. Lord, the paper box man, from Minnesota.

From August 27 to September 7 there will be a special display of asters in the Horticulture building at the World's Fair. There are seven classes and from the entries the exhibition promises to be large. Superintendent Hadkinson is also receiving entries for the dahlia exhibition, which opens September 17 and closes September 27. Entries for these close September 14.

Bowling.

It was decided by the bowlers to play a series of twenty games for the silver water pitcher which the team won in the convention tournament. Every man who enters must roll at least sixteen games to qualify. The first series will be rolled September 5. Two teams rolled a friendly match last Monday, with scores as follows:

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market does not improve as yet and the general opinion is that the first signs of returning life need not be anticipated before the first of October. In the meantime everything is being put in ship-shape for the revival. Stores are being repaired and repainted. New fronts are going in and a general air of enterprise is perceptible everywhere. Outdoor stock shows evidence of the clearer weather and is very abundant. Glodioli seem to hold well at 50 cents per 100. Asters have declined in value and dahlias are apparently unlimited in quantity and beauty.

Various Notes.

Business enterprise in the wholesale line shows no retrograde movement. The march, like that of Japan, goes forward. Twenty-eighth street gives further evidence of youthful vigor. The Youngs are more and more in evidence. John Young, Young & Nugent and Thos. Young, Jr., now see the quartette of wholesalers completed by the opening of the store of A. L. Young & Co., at 54 West Twenty-eighth street. This must be "a name to conjure with."

President Traendly was so pleased with St. Louis that he brought a souvenir back with him in the shape of a case of hay fever, the dark colored air of the Fair city being a little too shady for the lungs of the average New Yorker. Traendly & Schenck are handling some grand Chatenay and Golden Gate this week.

Young & Nugent are busy completing their new front and will have one of the best stores in the street when all the improvements are finished. Arthur Dacre, of this house, leaves next Monday for a two weeks' vacation at Moose Head Lake, Me.

J. K. Allen will be home on Thursday of this week and Miss Reilly, the faithful bookkeeper and manager during his absence in Europe, will start on a well earned holiday on Saturday. Her outing will include a week in the Adirondacks and possibly a visit to the World's Fair.

Mrs. Charles Smith, of Woodside, left for her old home in Scotland on Saturday, by the Lucania, contemplating a six months' visit amid the scenes of her childhood.

The new greenhouses of the Hinode Florist Co., at Whitestone, are nearly completed and their size and facilities will be a surprise to visitors, as well as the quaint Japanese plants which are to be seen there the year around in innumerable quantity and great variety.

Chas. Lenker is building at Freeport.

John Scott is much elated with the success and reception of Scottii at the convention.

Arthur Boddington was more than pleased with the practical cordiality of his reception at the S. A. F. convention. Occupying the same store in which he began business, and with many of the old familiar faces around him, it is hard to realize he ever left it.

Patrick O'Mara returned Monday from his mountain outing in the Berkshire hills with his sister and cousins, where he spent the week succeeding the convention. He shows, with commendable pride, the "spare" prize won in the St. Louis bowling contest and is enthusiastic as to the founding of a New York club early in the fall that can supply material for first honors in the tournament next year at Washington. Evidently he thinks it will be the early birds who will drink from the silver cup in 1905.

Elliott was reshipping his first consignment of 100 cases of Holland bulbs on Monday. His auctions begin September 15, with a general line of palms, bulbs, etc.

Stumpp & Walter Co. report a constant increase in business. A fine stock of freesia bulbs are much in demand and going fast.

H. H. Berger & Co. report the arrival of their Dutch bulbs in splendid condition, hyacinths and tulips being of better quality than in several years. They are so busy they are working nights. Their consignment of kentia seeds will arrive the last of October.

Mr. Wittpen, of McHutchison & Co., arrived in New York Monday on the Kaiser Wilhelm.

Cleary's horticultural hall opens Thursday, September 8, and thereafter every Tuesday and Friday the auctions continue. The first week in October Mr. Cleary conducts the sale at Robert Craig & Son's, in Philadelphia. September 15 the auction of Charles Bird's nursery stock at Arlington, N. J., begins.

Dr. Britton, of the New York Botanical Garden, is enjoying a month's tour in the Bahamas.

Convention Reflections.

The last of the eastern invaders has returned from the wild and woolly west and the general opinion still seems to be, there is only one New York. But the acknowledgment of a delightful visit to the great Fair city, the convention and the exposition is universal. Everybody has only good things to say of the grand hospitality of the St. Louis florists, the faithful and earnest devotion shown by all to the best interests of the visiting brethren and sisters, and the wonderful skill and unanimity of the St. Louis ladies of the St. Louis club in their excellent management of every detail entrusted to their care.

For high class exhibits, unfailing interest and commendable harmony the convention of 1904 goes on record as one of the lifetime memories. To those who remained over to enjoy the Fair, the heat and the cyclones, there were experiences never to be forgotten. That any florist within a thousand miles of St. Louis missed the convention is a mystery to those who attended. More and more these yearly conventions demonstrate their value as reunions, cementers of friendships, fraternal love feasts without which the S. A. F. would disintegrate. Exhibits, sports, receptions, essays upon subjects of universal interest and a disposition to do the things that make for the greatest good to the greatest number; these are the foundations of the continuance of the society, so dear to all of us. Long may it prosper.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

PACIFIC COAST.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

The Vancouver Floral Co. is adding to its glass and is installing a new boiler. Their carnations and chrysanthemums are looking good. With Watkins and Pont stock is also in fine shape.

On August 29 Jas. Pont, R. Withers, manager of the Vancouver Floral Co., E. Kinnard, Ed Lunnediffe, H. H. Page and M. J. Henry started on one of their periodical trips to the woods, open for "fur, fin or feathers." They generally have a pretty fair commissary department and keep open house for all in the craft.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business is about at a standstill. There has been very little wedding or funeral work during the past week and stock of all kinds has accumulated on the retailers' hands. Asters are very plentiful and very cheap and of good quality. A few chrysanthemums are seen, but they will not be plentiful until next month. Roses are scarce and they are the only flowers that are in demand. The prices remain the same as I quoted last week and carnation rates have not changed. Amaryllis is scarcer and sweet peas are on the wane. Lilium album and rubrum are not as plentiful as they were and are in very fair demand. Valley is plentiful enough to fill all requirements. Tuberoses are offered in quantity. Outdoor stuff, except dahlias, moves very slowly and the bulk of it is passing rapidly out of season.

Various Notes.

L. Wickstrom will move his store about September 1 to 1057 Market street, near the Central theater. It is a much larger and finer store and in a much better locality for business.

J. T. Thorsted, of Fruitvale, has finished erecting two carnation houses on his new grounds situated about a half mile north of his present location. The houses are 25x200 feet and he will plant them principally to Estelle, Enchantress, Queen Louise and Lawson.

Malcolm Lamond, head gardener for the city of Oakland, has received for the town conservatories a large consignment of tropical and hardy palms from Florida and also a fine collection of crotons.

Thomas E. Barlow, one of the best known horticulturists in the northern part of this state, died at Sebastopol, August 23.

H. Plath is on an extended eastern trip. G.

ACACIAS.

The acacias, although not natives of this coast, give us some of our most valuable adjuncts to our own shrubbery. Some of them have proven to be without equals when an evergreen sidewalk or lawn tree is desired. As this is the season of the year when the ripe seed can be gathered, it is also the best time for planting it, and a few suggestions as to varieties that are particularly valuable, as well as a few hints on their growing, are in order.

A very good sample is A. mollissima. This grows to a height of fifty feet, has light fern-like foliage and in the springtime is literally covered with masses of golden yellow blooms. These fragrant flowers are sold in great quantities on the street corners during their season. The seed of this variety should be soaked about twenty-four hours before planting, as this makes easily a difference of three months in its germinating properties. Plant in flats and keep lightly shaded for a couple of months, when the young plants will have attained a height of a couple of inches. They can then be placed in the open, but if the weather gets too frosty or too wet they should be brought under cover. If the seed has not been sown too thickly, in which case it is hard to keep them from damping off, they will be ready to plant in thumb pots early in March. They should be kept inside for a month or so, until they become established, and about a year from the time the seed was planted they will have attained the height of twelve inches, when they are ready to be shifted into 4-inch pots. They will stand from five to six feet high the following spring, when they will be ready for sale. A six-foot tree looks better, of course, if transplanted into a 6-inch pot, but there is no trouble in handling this variety in a smaller sized pot.

The next variety of acacia in value is the well known blackwood, A. melanoxylon. This is a shade easier to handle than the variety I have previously described and is one of the best for sidewalk planting. It is a more erect grower and a very vigorous tree. They require the same treatment from seed as the A. mollissima, but will make a heavier tree in a shorter time. Do not let the plants stand too long in one place without lifting them up occasionally, for otherwise they are bound to root through and the acacia family do not recover easily when the roots are broken.

One of the most beautiful varieties we have here is A. linearis. This is inclined to spread more after the fashion of the willow. They do not seed freely. I put a couple of large plants in 8-inch pots in the greenhouse and cut them down to within five feet from the soil. They made a great quantity of young shoots and I had no difficulty in rooting them in boxes of sand. This sort takes about twice as long to make a tree large enough to be salable, but it is always in demand at very good prices. The A. floribunda is of dwarfish growth and is more suitable for lawn planting than for sidewalk. It is a fairly fast grower and blooms throughout the year. It is easily grown from seed. A. latifolia grows fairly fast, but I do not find it as satisfactory a sort to grow as A. melanoxylon. A. pycnantha is the golden wattle of Australia and is of rapid growth. A. pravissima is a variety that is peculiar in that it has thorny foliage. It is a fast grower and for a thick hedge has few equals. It grows easily from seed and is very hardy. A. dealbata, the silver wattle, is a very striking tree that is covered in spring with feathery blossoms of a beautiful golden yellow. It is not so hardy as some of the other sorts, but it is a valuable tree.

There are a great many other kinds. G.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.—W. E. F. Weber has added 1,000 feet of glass to his place this summer and, having everything in good shape for fall, is visiting at Belleville, Ill., and taking in the World's Fair at St. Louis.

MANCHESTER, MASS.

The annual summer show of the North Shore Horticultural Society took place on August 25 and proved the finest the society had ever held. There were prizes offered in no less than 108 regular classes, in addition to a number of specials. For best display of flowers arranged for effect, H. L. Higginson, Joseph Clark, gardener, won the silver medal; Mrs. R. C. Hooper, William Swan, gardener, being second. The latter showed the best twenty plants arranged for effect. Among the other successful exhibitors were Miss A. G. Thayer, Mrs. W. D. Denegre, W. B. Walker, Mrs. S. V. R. Crosby, Philip Dexter, F. Jackson, A. Jackson, Mrs. M. B. Mason, Mrs. C. H. Tweed, Mrs. S. P. Blake, W. Scott Fitz, Mrs. G. E. Cabot, Mrs. G. McLane, Mrs. T. J. Coolidge, Mrs. Scott Annable and N. J. Murray. In the way of miscellaneous exhibits Blue Hill Nurseries had a fine collection of tritomas, Southworth Bros., a collection of phlox, and R. & J. Farquhar their new Christmas lily, which received a first-class certificate. The show was a most creditable one in every way.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Several times this season we have reported the dullest week of the summer, only to find one duller, but that should be a safe designation for the present period for it is certainly the worst to date and it doesn't seem possible that things could be more stagnant. There is a fair amount of shipping but it is almost impossible to fill orders with any degree of satisfaction, so poor are the average receipts. Local demand is very light, funeral work having amounted to very little for some time.

Beauties are not quite so plentiful as a week ago, but there are plenty of the moderate lengths. Other roses are coming in much more freely and Brides and Maids average very poor. Prices are lower than for a long time, plenty of short stuff being offered at $5 per thousand. The best stock cut is from old plants. Chatenay is also plentiful and receipts of Liberty are ahead of requirements. Kaiserin is in demand. Carnations are sold very cheap because of large receipts, low quality and lack of demand. A few are now being cut indoors but are so short that the outdoor stock generally finds preference.

The aster glut is heavier than ever and prices run all the way from 2 cents a bunch to 2 cents apiece, occasionally higher for fancy stock, and one sale of 15,000 was reported last Saturday at 1 cent a bunch. A great many go to the dump. Gladioli are in nearly the same fix as asters. Not many dahlias are seen, but enough. Tuberoses move slowly. There are large offerings of "green goods," especially asparagus.

Various Notes.

H. H. Battles, the well known Philadelphia retailer, was a caller at the REVIEW office while in Chicago for a couple of days on his way home from the World's Fair, where he was one week behind the conventionites. Another caller was Wm. Falconer, president of the Pittsburg Florists' Club, who was in town to attend the convention of the Amerian Association of Cemetery Superintendents.

George Weinhoeber says that, while there has been little doing this summer, it has been no more dull than last year, when they felt that they did a very fair summer business.

Ed Winterson took four days' vacation last week, which is worthy of note because of the way he is sticking to business these times when persuasion is wasted on the buyers.

The wholesalers will next week begin keeping open until six o'clock. Most of them this week resumed issuing their weekly price lists. In Hunt's list we read that "Chatenay will be more abundant the coming season than last and promises to be a big factor from now on." And then there is this cheerful report: "The past dull season has been one of the liveliest dull seasons for July and August that we have ever had."

Frank Fischer will give up his lease on the old Hilmers place at Blue Island and will probably go back to Joliet. The place has never been wholly repaired since the big hail storm two years ago.

August Dressel, Louis Gresenz, Sam Pearce, George Damm and Alex. Henderson were over to St. Joe the other day on a fishing expedition. They tell some great stories of Pearce's success as a fisherman, but he owns up that he didn't get even a bite.

The F. E. Butler Floral Co. has been incorporated by F. E. Butler, S. Butler and J. F. Butler, capital stock $2,500. As stated last week, they will soon open a retail store at 291 Dearborn street.

Mrs. J. B. Deamud is recovering from an illness of a couple of weeks' duration.

J. A. Budlong has had a particularly good cut of Beauties this summer. His place is all in nice shape and the boys at the store are looking forward to a very good season.

D. W. Brant is cutting roses from carried over stock. His carnations, the plantings of which have been increased this year, are looking good.

M. Winandy is now operating ten houses which have heretofore been leased to a vegetable grower and has them all planted to carnations. This gives him twenty houses in this flower.

The Sprague, Smith Co. sold two carloads of glass at Saginaw to repair the recent loss by hail.

Sinner Bros. say that they find Liberty a good money maker, better than Meteor at all seasons.

S. S. Skidelsky was a recent visitor. He reports having sold over 40,000 of the carnation Fred Burki. This is the white which made such a good impression at the Carnation Society's show at Detroit. It is to be sent out in January. Wietor Bros. have ordered 2,500.

Frank Banning, of Kinsman, O., is sending local commission houses some very fine gladioli of a variety called Reuben H. Warder. Amling received a box of them Sunday morning so badly bruised by rough handling in transit as to be almost unsalable.

F. W. Timme cut his first asters August 29. He has a particularly good strain which he has spent years in working up.

Mr. and Mrs. George Asmus have been visiting at their old home in Buffalo.

Visitors: J. F. Sullivan, Detroit; L. Cole, Battle Creek; C. P. Mueller, Wichita, Kan.

HARRISON'S PEONY MANUAL.

A Manual on Propagation and Cultivation of the Peony has just been issued by C. S. Harrison, of York, Neb. In the introduction we find it stated that the pamphlet was written and compiled for two reasons; first, because there was no work on the subject in the English language; second, because there ought to be. A chapter is devoted to each phase of peony growing, discussing it from the standpoint of one who has spent almost a lifetime with the flower. Then there are a number of extracts from the writings of well known peony growers and a long list of varieties with descriptions generally as a result of the author's trials. All this makes up a book very interesting to every peony grower, but the idea of the manual is to introduce the flower to the masses.

THE YOUNGEST FLORIST.

Here are some more young florists. Byrne Bros., of Buffalo, are aged 20 and 22. They conduct a retail store at 658 Main street and now have in course of erection two large modern greenhouses on a tract of seven acres of well adapted land which they bought to afford opportunity for expansion.

SAGINAW, MICH.—The Wm. Roethke Floral Company is very busy repairing the damage done by the hail storm July 22. Their entire place of 80,000 feet of glass was practically destroyed and the task on which they are now engaged is in many respects worse than starting new.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia ; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

CLOVER seed prices are the highest in years.

THE Iowa Seed Co., Des Moines, makes a profitable specialty of importing parrots.

THE Harrisii crop is proving equal to all requirements, large sizes as well as small.

TOO much rain in northern New York and Canada is likely to shorten the pea crop there.

ON September 1 there remained 175 acres of onion sets to be harvested in the Chicago district.

HJALMAR HARTMANN, of Copenhagen, Denmark, expects to be in Chicago by the end of the week.

THE steamer Trinidad, from Bermuda, arriving at New York August 22, brought 513 cases of Harrisii bulbs.

O. H. R. WIESE, representing David Sachs, of Quedlinburg, Germany, expects to reach Chicago September 5.

S. B. DICKS, representing Cooper, Taber & Co., London, England, is due to reach Chicago September 2.

S. F. LEONARD, of Chicago, is making a business trip covering the seed growing points on the Pacific coast.

THE steamer Potsdam, from Amsterdam, arriving at New York August 23, had on board 1,897 cases of Dutch bulbs.

YELLOW onion sets are offered at 4 cents per pound at Louisville, Ky., whites at 5 cents per pound, for immediate delivery.

J. M. LAMB reports the outlook for the North Carolina bulb crop very good as to quality, but the quantity will hardly meet the demand.

J. W. RATEKIN, Shenandoah, Ia., reports 1,500 acres Pride of the North sweet corn already past danger of frost, with all varieties maturing nicely.

SEEDSMEN will be interested in the method by which Johnson & Stokes illustrate their catalogue as described in the Philadelphia letter in this issue.

ADAM CURRIE, of Currie Bros., Milwaukee, has been appointed a member of the international jury of awards on vegetable food product exhibits at the World's Fair.

SECRETARY KENDEL has issued the proceedings of the twenty-second convention of the American Seed Trade Association and has also prepared as a separate pamphlet the address of George H. Maxwell. The latter is for general distribution.

THE week's reports from the bean fields are quite discouraging. Black wax is showing considerable rust and other wax sorts are not up to the average. Green pods, excepting Longfellow, promise better. Valentine will probably give the best yield.

E. H. ULLERY & Co., Omaha, Neb., who recently made an assignment of their seed stock and fixtures, have made a payment to their creditors of 33 1-3 cents on the dollar.

THE Cleveland Seed Co., Rochester, has passed into the hands of S. M. Pease, H. H. Pease and C. R. Millham, who will grow peas, beans and sweet corn for the wholesale trade.

HEAVY rains in western Iowa and eastern Nebraska make the prospect for sweet corn and vine seeds rather hard to estimate. The present conditions are unfavorable for these crops.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.—Alfred J. Brown Seed Co. is now located at the corner of Ottawa and Louis streets. Its new building has been refitted with improved machinery, making it an up-to-date seed warehouse.

THE Harry N. Hammond Seed Co., Bay City, Mich., announces that the good will, fixtures, stock of seeds, warehouse and all its property and assets will be sold at public auction on September 6 at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

EUROPEAN SEED CROP.

It is now possible to give some particulars as to the probable yield of the seed crops in the coming season; the information supplied is based upon a personal survey of the crops in the principal seed growing districts of Great Britain, says the Gardeners' Chronicle, August 20:

Peas.—It is only a reasonable expectation that after the very wet season of last year the condition of stock-seeds would be so indifferent that the growth of the plants would be correspondingly inferior, the result being that the present season's harvest is likely to be a very thin one. Another factor as governing the scarcity was the fact that the price fetched by peas last season was so high as to be a great inducement to sell what would otherwise have been sown, and so the breadths put out are smaller than usual. It seems quite certain that seed peas will gradually rise in value, and some sorts will be as dear as last year. This remark applies particularly to the late varieties, especially as it is anticipated that none will be forthcoming from the continent.

Broad Beans.—The crops in Lincolnshire and in the adjacent bean-growing districts are seriously affected by the black or smother-fly; though it is probable, given the continuance of fine weather, the samples will be good.

Beans, Kidney, Runner and Dwarf.—Generally speaking, the breadths and plants are thin, and in certain localities, where there have been recent rains, the flowers are now setting their pods more numerously than previously. Reports from Germany are of a more favorable character.

Turnips.—So extremely short is the yield that it is said the crop may be written off as practically nil. It is confidently expected that prices for the best qualities of seeds will be very high.

Mangel Wurzel.—The plants did not thrive in a satisfactory manner, and thus the yield of seed has been materially affected. Golden Tankard and Golden Globe, with other forms of the choicer stocks of Globes, will command double the prices of last year.

Cabbages.—Varieties chiefly grown for cutting in spring have run to bloom in a very imperfect manner. In more favorable localities, where there is an improved growth, the crop appears to be satisfactory.

Onion.—The onion plant for seed is not so plentiful as last year, and bulbs for planting for seeds another year appear to be scarce and small. It is assumed that the plantations made for seeds in 1905 will be as limited as those in 1904.

Carrot.—The seed crop in this country so far looks well. From France comes the report there is great danger to the carrot crop from the small white maggot which appears in the flower-heads and practically destroys the crop.

Lettuce.—Very little lettuce is now grown in this country for seed-saving. In the lettuce-growing districts of France and Germany the crops are favorable.

Parsley.—Good breadths are out for seed purposes and so far the crops promise very well.

Home-grown Flower Seeds.—Seeds of nasturtium were scarce last year, but this season promises a good crop. Sweet peas are also promising well. Wallflowers all promise well except the yellow section, of which there is a likelihood of a scarcity.

WARREN, O.—Adgate & Son are building a rose house 24x100 and changing from hot water to steam, putting in a fifty horse-power boiler. All the local growers have their carnations benched. Business has been good because of much funeral work.

GREENSBURG, IND.—The Greensburg Floral Co. is moving the greenhouse to a new and very good location at the corner of Broadway and McKee street, only two blocks south of the Court House. Mrs. H. Demer is the proprietor and J. H. Demer the florist and manager.

CATERPILLARS.

I would be pleased to have you give me a little advice on two things, a grey caterpillar and a grey miller. Can you tell me whether these millers produce the caterpillars? If one is the cause of the other, will you please tell me what to do in order to either prevent or destroy these pests, without injuring my plants? R. L. S.

As our correspondent does not name the plants infested by the caterpillars and moths or "millers," we are unable to tell whether these are outdoors or in the houses. Caterpillars, as is well known, are the larvæ of moths and butterflies and if we can destroy the latter before the eggs are laid, which hatch the destructive caterpillars, much good will have been accomplished. It is, however, a difficult task to do so. Even were fumigation used strong enough night after night to kill the moths in the greenhouses, we are still likely to have a crop of caterpillars. It is well to kill all possible butterflies by hand and thus lessen the crops all we can.

At this season a caterpillar of the nature named attacks the foliage on chrysanthemums. Hand picking every morning, looking under the foliage, is the only safe cure. Spraying with insecticides of a poisonous nature cannot be recommended.

Caterpillars are numerous just now and much watchfulness is needed. A great damage is speedily done. We think hand picking the safest remedy for R. L. S. if his plants are indoors. For outdoor trees and shrubs use Disparene at the rate of four pounds to fifty gallons of water for any which may appear. As this insecticide whitens the foliage and adheres closely to it, plants indoors and those grown for cutting outside should not be sprayed with it. W. N. Craig.

Charles City, Ia.—M. H. Weatherbee is giving most of his space to carnations, the stock looking fine.

KANSAS CITY.

On August 23 seven Kansas City florists accepted the invitation of Geo. M. Kellogg to visit his large establishment at Pleasant Hill and sample the many delicacies that are produced in his spacious gardens and lakes. We were conducted through nearly seven acres of greenhouses by Mr. Bastien and, for the season, we found stock remarkably promising.

Mr. Kellogg adheres to the solid bed plan and from the manner in which the establishment expands we can but conclude that he finds profit therein. The several houses of Meteors and American Beauties excited the admiration of all. Golden Gate and Ivory are grown the second and third year with no limit to cutting. Two of the newer introductions, Uncle John and General MacArthur, are in prime condition. Mme. Chatenay has been given more space, for there is no doubt but what this rose with its friend, Sunrise, has come to stay.

Three large houses of Boston ferns show the demand is not diminishing in this line. When we asked about the Piersoni and its future the answer received was certainly of a doubtful nature.

Carnations were all under glass and the bulb question was being handled with interest. Harrisii comes to the front in the lily line, although longiflorum can hardly be dispensed with.

The large lake that supplies the plant with water was an unexpected point of interest from the fact that Mr. Bastien had thoughtfully provided fishing tackle and we found the victims easily landed.

We were then escorted to Mr. Kellogg's residence, where an elegant luncheon was served with Mrs. Parker and Miss Bush as genial hostesses. Those participating in the pleasure trip were J. Tobler, of Westport; F. C. Oakley, of Kansas City, Kan.; E. A. Humfeld, D. Freudenthal, E. D. Ellsworth, L. M. Schwager and C. M. Wise, of Kansas City.

Friends of Miss Ethel Parker, granddaughter of Geo. M. Kellogg, will be pleased to learn of her marriage to A. E. Shurling, of Oregon, Mo. The ceremony was celebrated at the house of the bride's parents, at Pleasant Hill.

L. M. S.

SCHUYLERVILLE, N. Y.

Miss Rogers, who is very pleasantly situated on the corner of Broadway and Washington avenue, and whose place always looks especially neat and attractive, has just been adding more room to meet the needs of her steadily increasing trade. It is a new carnation house, right up to date, iron benches, etc., and a propagating house. This gives her about twice as much glass as heretofore and she hopes to be able to meet all demands, but looking at the past it may be predicted that it will only be a short time before she will have to add more. The construction work has been under the charge of the president of the Chatham Floral Co., who also furnished the heating plant.

BELLEVILLE, ILL.—E. W. Guy is entertaining his father, T. M. Guy, of St. Joseph, Mo.

JOLIET, ILL.—John Lambert has presented the plants in his conservatories to local charitable institutions and closed the conservatories.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

SNYDER BROS., Minersville, Pa., have purchased what is known as the Cockill farm on the Llewellyn road and will establish a nursery business there.

THE nurserymen of Florida are largely increasing their plantings, especially of citrus trees, much stock now being exported to the West Indies, Mexico, South America and Africa.

THE growing season of 1904 to date has generally been much more favorable than in 1903. With an ordinary digging season nurserymen should be able to get good stocks into the storage houses and be much better fixed for spring than they were the past season.

THE American Peony Society has issued a bulletin stating the plan under which the society will co-operate with the horticultural department of Cornell University in a study of the peony to correct nomenclature. All interested growers are invited to send three plants of each variety for test to John Craig, Ithaca, N. Y.

THE Association of American Cemetery Superintendents met in Chicago August 23 to 25. The following new officers were elected: President, James H. Morton, Boston, Mass.; vice-president, E. G. Carter, Chicago; secretary-treasurer, Bellett Lawson, Harrisburg, Pa. The next meeting will be held in Washington, D. C., at a date to be selected by the executive committee.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Business the past week has shown no signs of improving. We are having very dry weather again and carnations in the field are suffering for the want of rain.

Joseph Coenen and his son have returned from a two weeks' visit at the World's Fair.

Ferdinand Link, a promising young florist, has added another greenhouse to his plant.

Miss Violet Rudy, daughter of T. B. Rudy, is spending the summer in Carrolton, Ky.

Jno. Bohrman will go some time in September to visit the World's Fair.

Henry Fuchs is adding two more houses to his plant.

Wm. Mann has sold out his business to Beutel & Frederick. The latter has been employed for a number of years by Jacob Schulz. The craft wish them success.

Fred Haupt and wife have gone to California to attend the Knights Templar conclave.

The next meeting of the Kentucky Society of Florists will be held at Chas. Reimers' on Hite avenue. Everybody is invited to be present.

Geo. Schulz has two houses of carnations which were planted in April and grown without glass, which are hard to beat.

A. Heitz has a very fine lot of potted chrysanthemums for his cemetery trade.

RICHMOND, IND., Dec. 24, 1903.

Messrs. BAUR & SMITH, Indianapolis, Ind.

GENTLEMEN:—We have a water famine at our place and I have not been able to water my plants for such a long time the soil was as dry as the dust in the street, so we hauled water this week and got the plants watered well Wednesday. We are drilling our well deeper but have no water yet. Now the reason I tell you this is, I did not like Indianapolis so well on account of the petals cupping so. Well, I got water to them and I am surprised; even with the drought, it is one, two, three over Lawson to-day, petals straight and form and size grand in every respect. I will grow it in place of Lawson and Dorothy. How early can you deliver to us 1000 good cuttings? Let me know at once and oblige.

Yours truly,

CHAS. KNOPF.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business is still good, in fact considerably better than it was at this time last year. This is due, doubtless, to the fact that there are many more flowers now than I have ever seen at this time of year. While stock was rather scarce last week, there was any quantity in sight this week, and buyers could get whatever they wanted, except carnations. A few field-grown ones are seen, but the quality is very poor. It will not be long, though, till several growers will begin to cut from indoors. Asters are coming by the thousands and the price has suffered in consequence, but very few of them have found their way to the dump. Gladioli are not so plentiful and sell fairly well. Some of very good quality are to be had. Tuberoses are a little scarce and those that do come in sell quickly.

Beauties are still in good supply and demand. Some fine Kaiserin also sell well. Brides, Maids and other roses from new stock are short-stemmed and in many cases are hard to move at a satisfactory price, but they go well for funeral work.

Various Notes.

E. G. Gillett and family have just returned from St. Louis and report a fine time spent at the S. A. F. convention and attending the Fair.

Max Rudolph and Gus Adrian are home after an extended trip about the Great Lakes. They spent a good deal of time in fishing and it is needless to say anything in regard to the numbers or size of the finny tribe that fell victims to their hooks.

J. Baer and wife are now at St. Louis attending the fair.

Wm. Bolia died during the past week. He was born in Germany and has been in business near this city for many years. He was about 65 years old.

C. J. Ohmer.

PLANTS FOR PARK PURPOSES.

[The following is a paper by J. T. D. Fulmer, of Des Moines, reprinted from the bulletin of the Iowa Park and Forestry Association.]

By greenhouse plants we mean all tender plants usually found in stock in a commercial greenhouse. There are two ways in which such plants are used in parks; first, in a flowergarden; next in small beds scattered throughout the parks.

We think, however, that the former way is to be preferred, as it is most effective, and if so arranged will prove attractive. This can only be done by arranging colors so as to harmonize and blend together.

There are many kinds of greenhouse plants, and one has a great variety to select from in forming a garden suitable for a park, notwithstanding a greater variety is required for such a garden than is required on a private estate. There is always an abundance however, if one will study to group them aright.

The cannas are fine and stately and when planted in beds of but one color to a bed they make a good showing, especially if surrounded by Pennisetum Rupelianum. Black Beauty canna is the finest of the dark-foliaged varieties and when bordered with Golden Bedder coleus is exceedingly attractive. This variety of canna should not be allowed to bloom.

The caladium is very stately and if bordered with Coleus Verschaffeltii is very handsome. Geraniums are always welcome in any garden, if they are not planted so as to put pink and red shades together. If pink and red must be used in the same bed put something between them. Madame Salleroi is a good border for the zonal geranium, as is also Stevia variegata, santolina, alternanthera and Archryanthes Emersonii.

Salvia, if grown from cuttings, is a grand plant, and can be used as a border for Florence Vaughan canna or as a separate bed bordered with Abutilon Savitzii.

Then there are the tender roses in variety, the heliotrope, acalyphas, begonias, dahlias, ageratum, petunias, coleus and a host of others suitable for such work.

The Musa ensete makes a fine centerpiece and should be backed up with cannas or caladiums.

Then in this garden of ours there should be carpet bedding also, and for this we have the Stevia variegata, santolina, Abutilon Savitzii, Acalypha tricolor and A. Macafeeana, alternanthera, echeveria and some of the small sedums.

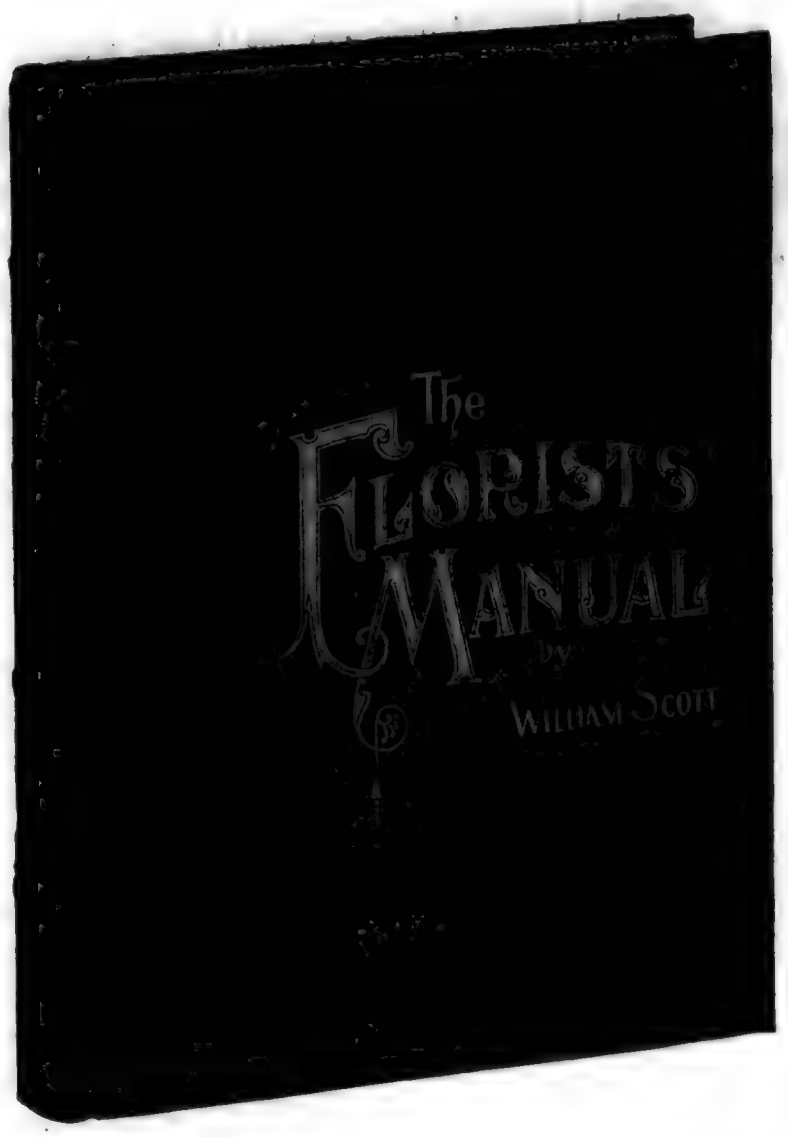
I cannot say that I disapprove the use of flags, clocks, calendars and the like, for we see the same idea carried out in many places. Flowers are used in the decoration of carpets and lace curtains and if permissible there, certainly in parks also, worked out with live plants, especially if well done.

The general grouping of all the beds should be so arranged as to allow plenty of room for spectators to move among them conveniently.

Then also must be included sub-tropical bedding; and here is an opportunity for arranging a portion of the greenhouse plants which will always prove attractive. The use of Abyssinian banana, large specimen palms, agaves, dracænas, pandanuses, crotons and some of the many beautiful grasses are allowable.

And just here let me say that all plants should be plainly labeled so that visitors can easily understand what they are, and my observations lead me to say that a garden thus arranged will draw the greater part of the visitors to our city parks. For there is no doubt but that a place can be made more attractive by the use of flowers than in any other way.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.



The Gardeners' Chronicle.

THE GENERAL opinion is that sawdust is worse than useless, but it becomes valuable if burnt. It is suggested to burn it mixed with vegetable rubbish, then to sift the ashes and mix them with sifted earth. This has been proved by experience to be a very valuable top-dressing.

SO LONG as the clear stem below the tulip flower will snap sharply on being bent, the time for lifting the bulb has not come, but when the stems will bend double without snapping off, the bulbs may be taken up. The florist takes the greatest care of his bulbs when lifted; they are placed in drawers having receptacles answering to the position of the bulb in the bed. As a rule the tulip cabinet is so constructed that air can circulate among the drawers, ensuring cool and dry conditions for the bulbs.

SEDALIA, MO.—Gelven & Son have recently purchased six city lots one block south of their plant, making fifteen lots to be devoted to their business. They will at once proceed to put up four additional greenhouses 130 feet long, using iron frames. They will also build a new fireproof boiler house and install a double heating plant, both steam and hot water. When these improvements are completed the plant will be the third largest in Missouri and for up-to-dateness will be excelled by none.

HERE IS A BUSINESS BOOK FOR BUSINESS MEN

NO SCIENCE BUT LOTS OF PRACTICAL COMMON SENSE.

It don't tell you the botanical classification but it does tell you how to produce marketable plants and cut flowers in the best and cheapest way.

It don't list every plant in cultivation but it does tell you just what you want to know about every plant that there is any money in for a Commercial Florist.

The articles are arranged alphabetically so that when you want to see what Mr. Scott says about Cannas you turn to the Cs and in an instant you have it.

FLORISTS' PUBLISHING CO.

Caxton Building, CHICAGO.

The book treats of over 200 subjects and is freely illustrated with fine half-tone engravings.

It is a book that you need in your business just as you need any other useful labor and money saving implement or device.

The price is $5.00, carriage prepaid.

There are only a few copies of the work left. If you have not already obtained a copy order one to-day or you may be too late.

BRAMPTON, ONT.

Most of the growers in this district are about through with the planting of carnations, except the Dale Estate, and here the work is being pushed with all speed. The plants are lifting in the very best shape and late rains are helping very much. Practically no wilting is seen, owing to the dull weather, and the only variety showing the effects of the lifting is Glacier. The summer planted carnations are showing good growth and are giving some fair blooms. The roses are well up to the average and some good Bride and Maid are being cut.

Wm. Fendley is busy with his new range and has the rafters up on two of the houses. These houses are twenty feet six inches in width and have three benches, the center bench being built to carry rails for a car to empty and fill the benches. At the Fendley establishment some very good Queen Louise were cut during August and those seen last week would compare very favorably with those cut earlier in the season. Mr. Fendley is planting largely of this variety for white. W. D.

Lisbon, O.—John W. Scott is about to add one house 20x75 feet to his establishment.

FOR SALE.

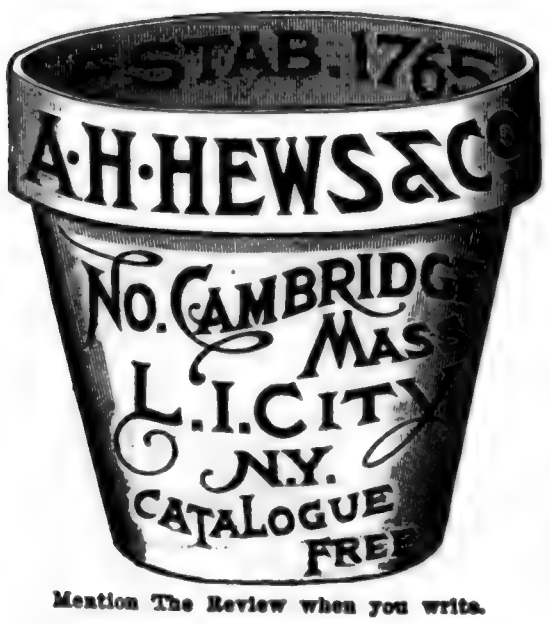
South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.



"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettic.

ADIANTUM CROWEANUM

The New Maidenhair Fern.

AFTER A THOROUGH and careful examination by all the experts and critics in the trade at the St. Louis Convention, and stood the test so well, the progressive, keen and up-to-date florist should this year buy this standard introduction that is freely conceded to be the best keeping, lasting and money-making, both for cut fronds and plants of all Adiantums ever introduced to the trade. : : :

A Great Acquisition.

The best of all ferns for cut fronds. Brings the highest prices. The easiest to grow and the easiest to sell. Has received the highest encomiums from the leading cut flower dealers in the country.

ADIANTUM CROWEANUM originated at Utica, N.Y., about fourteen years ago, and has been extensively grown by the original owner, Mr. Crowe, who has received phenomenal prices for the cut fronds in the New York and other markets, and has created a great demand for it. Buy now. Buy liberally and reap the benefits.

The fronds are long, elegantly proportioned and of a texture that renders it the best keeper and shipper of all Adiantums. It is a very free and continuous grower, requires no rest and responds readily to fertilizers. Anyone can grow it and get good money for it.

HOW IT PLEASES AFTER TRAVELING ACROSS THE CONTINENT.

GRACE HILL NURSERY (J. W. Wolfskill, Prop.)
Wholesale Florist, Los Angeles, Cal.,
(Geo. Watson, Mgr.) July 7, 1904.
W. F. KASTING, Buffalo, N. Y.

Allow me to congratulate you on Adiantum Croweanum, which arrived here in fine condition. I thank you for sending such fine stock and trust I shall have success in growing it.

Respectfully, GRACE HILL NURSERY.

BOTANIC GARDEN, HARVARD UNIVERSITY.
Cambridge, Mass., August 5, 1905.

Dear Mr. Stewart:—After growing Adiantum Croweanum and Adiantum Hybridum for one year I find that they are quite distinct. Adiantum Croweanum has longer fronds, grows more upright and has smaller pinnules than Hybridum. Adiantum Hybridum does not grow quite as tall as Croweanum, the fronds are not quite as straight or upright as Croweanum and are of darker shade of green. The pinnules are much larger than in Croweanum. Dr. Benjamin Robinson of the Gray Herbarium examined the plants this day and said they were quite distinct.

Yours respectfully,
ROBERT CAMERON.

Many strong endorsements given in our Circular of Testimonials, free on request.

Still about 15,000 fine, strong, vigorous 3-inch pot plants to offer. Send in your orders now, and have them filled at once at the following low prices for something entirely new.

$5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100; $250.00 per 1000. 25 at 100 rate; 250 at 1000 rate.

Also Stock Plants from bench, in size requiring 8 to 10-inch pots, $9.00 per doz.; $67.50 per 100; $600.00 per 1000.

A booklet on growing this Fern, by the originator, Mr. Crowe, free with every shipment.

BEGINNINGS IN DESIGN...

Seek Simplicity.

A table center-piece may be the most free and easy in arrangement of any floral design. It is the one which people look at longest and study the most. It follows that it should be of the best possible quality and arrangement, as near perfect as possible. A funeral design, upon which you may spend hours of painstaking labor, is passed over with a glance, and even an elaborate wedding or reception decoration must share attention with the excitement of a minute or two. But when the guests reach the dining-room, they are ready to sit down and look at something, so here is your chance to transport a bit of the woods or the garden and be sure of attention and appreciation. Have before you a simple ideal. Simplicity as applied to design means precisely what it does in other spheres, unaffected, not complicated, neat, sweet, plain.

The tables you will ordinarily be called upon to decorate will be those for luncheons, dinners, receptions and banquets. Of all these perhaps the reception is the easiest, for it is likely to be a square or round table, where only those who pour are seated. The others, for any number of guests, are likely to be either a number of small tables, with very little space to be had for decoration, or long tables upon which the decoration needs to be stretched out to be enjoyed in the same degree by all the guests.

Never Obscure the View.

About the first thing in table decorations that any experienced florist will call your attention to would be to regulate the height of your decorative scheme to suit the convenience of the guests. Never obscure the view across the table. It would be awkward to make the guests look up to see the decorations; so the low basket and plaque decorations have come into vogue. The one exception to this rule is in the case of the reception table. There the guests are seated or stand around the dining-room, and the table center-piece should be rather tall for their benefit. The only objection you will meet to a tall reception table center-piece will be that those who pour at the opposite sides may have difficulty to converse across the table. This may be remedied by making the center-piece airy and not at all solid, which is a desirable quality anyhow. By no means allow the reception center-piece to be so low as to appear insignificant between the tall urns.

The Low Center-piece.

But to our low center-piece, which is the topic for discussion today. The one before us is of blue cornflowers and Euphorbia corollata, touched with a bunch of foxtail grass. The receptacle is a low wicker basket of a shade of blue blending with that of the flowers. This color scheme is most suitable for a daylight decoration. Line the basket with tinfoil. Fill with sphagnum two inches higher than the edge on one side, and an inch or two below the edge of the basket on the opposite side. Be especially careful to guard against any dripping from the moss. There is no need of tying the moss in the basket, nor covering it with the green, for the flower stems and the foliage will be thick enough in the completed piece to cover the sphagnum.

Stem three or four flowers together on one three-quarters pick, as per general directions for stemming given heretofore. Leave the buds and foliage on. Cut the flowers from six to twelve inches long, keeping the majority under eight inches. Have only a few as long as twelve inches, and let these be the ones most inclined to droop. Fill from the center outward. The heaviest parts are at the back right corner and the back of the piece proper. Here the cluster of cornflowers is set in with the stem ends close together and the tops spreading. The two heavy groups spoken of just above have their flowers from what appear to be points common to themselves. Clustering flowers connect the groups and follow the remaining outlines of the basket. The euphorbia is cut in umbrella-like clusters and stemmed one to a pick. It is not used as a filler, although inserted in the lighter parts and the edges. Foxtail grass both lightens the upper outline of the piece and completes the symmetry of the top. The longer-stemmed small groups of cornflowers make the balancing points on the sides and break the solid side outlines of the piece.

The whole piece is intended to represent a clump cut off one end of a patch of cornflowers, as seen growing in the garden. The opposite side of the piece, of course, will present a different appearance, which is all the better. Sprinkle the piece when complete, but not liberally enough to drip from the edges. Place on the table at the last possible moment. This color scheme is especially good to use with delft blue china. Occasionally you will have a call for odd coloring like this. Other colors might be used for the basket with these same flowers, or white. Before stemming the flowers let them stand in water two or three hours, if possible.

This style of arrangement might be used with equally good effect with marguerites, mignonette, peas and other small, slender-stemmed flowers. Have the foliage, flowers, basket and materials scrupulously clean. A spot on the linen cannot be removed at the last moment. No embroidered center-piece is necessary with this style of flower center-piece.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Conventions and Trade.

Referring to the Pacific coast notice in the REVIEW under date of August 25, wherein your correspondent belittles the practice of entertaining conventions, I must say that the article to me seems so narrow and so short-sighted that I can not imagine any business man in any community would sanction it. Least of all would it be expected from a member of our noble craft. Your correspondent dwells particularly on the fact that it does not benefit the florists, when every reasonable, thinking person must admit that no matter for what the money is spent, so long as it is spent in a given city, it must benefit all in that community. Your correspondent particularizes the Knights Templar, and I know for a fact that the Knights Templar as a rule leave more money per capita in cities they visit than any other organization. We well remember, when they visited our city in 1889, what a magnificent sum of money they left, the benefits of which were felt by the florists for a long time after, and I feel sure that the Knights Templar and likewise the Odd Fellows will leave no small sum of money to the city of San Francisco during the present month.

ATTRACTION.

I overheard a conversation between two eminent gentlemen relating to the success of a prominent business man with which the two were familiar. One commented that his principal cause of success was due to his thorough organization. "He has able assistants in every department." "Yes," said the other, "they're all expert in their line. It would be hard for him to fill their places." "Not at all," said the one, "a man of his ability would attract others just as good and their places would soon be filled." From which we may readily infer that it is the commanding general after all who is largely responsible for results. Frank B. White.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

WATCH THE INSECTS.

The early buds are swelling rapidly now and some of the earlier kinds are beginning to show color. Syringing overhead should be discontinued with these plants, and also in cases where crown buds are breaking through their husky covering. A crown bud generally forms itself into a miniature cup and when water lodges in this depression it sometimes causes the bud to rot and renders it useless. Now is the time to be certain that no red spider is present, because when syringing can no longer be practiced the spider will increase and multiply at an enormous rate. It is not at all an unusual thing to see a flower spoiled completely by nothing else but spider.

Black and green fly must also be banished completely now. The green fly particularly often secretes itself in the buds and its presence is not observed till too late to do anything. Light but persistent fumigating should be practiced. In a small house aphis punk is clean, easy and satisfactory. The grower having a large quantity of plants must perforce use tobacco stems or dust, owing to the expense entailed. Along about this time the festive grasshopper gets busy, eating the extreme tip of the shoot or gnawing two-thirds through the stem just below the bud, causing the bud to fall of its own weight, and inducing much profanity among growers at this case of "love's labor lost." Hand picking is the only way to clean out grasshoppers and early in the morning, while they are still drowsy and slow-moving, is about the only time to catch them easily.

Taking Up Plants Outside.

After September 1 it is time to take up any plants that are planted outside and get them potted up. Do not destroy more roots than you can help, or the result will be a serious check to the plants, causing them to lose a great deal of foliage. Carefully lifted and put in pots or boxes and shaded from the sun for several days, with frequent syringing, plants will take hold of the new soil and grow away almost at once, with little trouble. Growing outside and lifting in the early fall is a much cheaper method than growing plants continuously in pots.

More Novelties.

In addition to the varieties mentioned last week as under trial, we may name the following as most prominent at present writing:

Mrs. W. Higgie is a seedling of H. Weeks' and classed by him as the largest he has ever raised. It is a pure white Japanese. The best variety we have previously received from this grower is Mrs. H. Weeks and he thinks Mrs. Higgie a great improvement on Mrs. Weeks. At present it is not nearly so strong in growth as Weeks, making a long, slender growth more like Florence Molyneaux. It may prove to be a good commercial white, as it makes small foliage and can be planted close together.

Another white that looks extremely promising is Emily Mileham. This variety at present is a perfect pyramid of growth. The picture of the flower shows a beautiful shapely petal and if it is only full enough in the center it will be a grand variety, as we are shy on exhibition whites at present. It is said to closely resemble Mlle. T. Rey, a variety that we considered a queen in its class some nine years ago. This latter kind unfortunately soon went the way of all flesh, as it was at best a delicate grower, but Mileham at present is the strongest and most healthy looking of a large batch of novelties.

Mrs. J. Dunn is another white that has been largely exploited as a wonder. At present its showing is nothing very great, though it is dwarf and seemingly well constituted.

Lady Cranston, as the white sport from Mrs. Barkley, has had a phenomenal sale in England. Personally we never could handle Mrs. Barkley as well as some other growers, but we have seen phenomenal flowers of this variety set up in New York by the Hudson river growers. Lady Cranston will doubtless appeal to those experts on account of its parentage.

From Silsbury we get this year two varieties, Valerie Greenham and J. H. Silsbury. Valerie Greenham is evidently immense, flowers measuring ten inches wide and ten inches deep. It is a bright pink and will probably help to drive another nail in the coffin of poor old Morel, for so many years our standard in a pink Japanese.

Silsbury, from its photograph and color, which is given as a light crimson with golden yellow reverse, is evidently much like Lord Hopetoun. Time, which proveth all things, will show if it is any improvement. It is a dwarfer, stouter grower than Hopetoun. It is raised from the same seed head as Mrs. Vallis and is quite as large as that variety. Mrs. Vallis was well distributed this spring and the way it is exhibited will be a good index as to the value of J. H. Silsbury.

These are at present the most prominent of a long list of new kinds imported from the four corners of the earth and while, when one looks at the bills, sometimes it is apt to be nerve-racking, still if there is anything good we must have it, no matter what the cost or trouble. Progress is the watchword of American horticulture and the mum grower must get in line with the rest of the procession.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Summer Bloom.

If you intend to plant a few varieties for blooming outside next summer, preparations should now be made. First-class blooms cannot be grown in the field on account of conditions being beyond control. Stems will be shorter, flowers smaller and more or less affected by rain and dew; in fact, the quality is much below those grown under glass, but as the demand is mostly for an inexpensive grade during July and August, the product will find a market and at a fair profit, too, as aside from the room taken up by the young stock during the winter, there is little expense connected with their growth, so the risk is not great in venturing a trial lot at least.

Varieties that are quick to get established and which bloom soon after housing generally give the best results and from these the most desirable cuttings can be obtained. It is best to take cuttings that have grown since housing. Any taken from plants as lifted or when in the field do not take kindly to the propagating bench and even should a small percentage root, they never make satisfactory plants. Choose a bench in the coolest place possible and fill with fresh sand. Insert the cuttings as in winter propagation except that more space must be given between and in the rows. See that the bench has good drainage or the extra watering required at this time of year may cause a case of rot to set in.

As soon as rooted we used to pot into 2¼-inch pots, but found by pricking into flats much time and space was saved at a period when very valuable. Potted later into small pots and shifted as required, just as good plants were produced. Use fresh soil without manure in the flats, but at first potting add a small quantity, increasing the amount slightly at each shift. The object is to get a stocky plant of slow growth, but not necessarily large, for if grown cool they will have had a partial rest and start off rapidly when planted out.

Prepare the ground this fall in which they are to flower. This will save valuable time in the spring and allow early planting, which is a necessity to success. It is very likely that a judicious use of water will be desirable at times during the summer, so locate them within reach of the hose. Geo. S. Osborn.

CARNATIONS FOR OUTDOORS.

What is the best carnation to plant outdoors in the far west, where we never have it colder than zero? Please mention the several colors. T. D.

I cannot answer your question from personal experience, but judging by the reports from your section I would recommend the following varieties to grow in the open ground: Ethel Crocker, Mrs. Lawson and Wm. Scott for pink, Flora Hill, Gov. Wolcott and Prosperity for white, Portia, Crane and America for red and Eldorado for yellow. I don't think you will miss it on any of these varieties, but after a season's trial you will be able to select those which give you the best returns. There may be some other native varieties which have not found their way east, but are among the best to grow under conditions which prevail in your locality.

A. F. J. BAUR.

CARNATIONS WITH ROSES.

What is the best pink or white carnation to plant on a side bench in a rose house, with a night temperature of 56 degrees? The bench is two and one-half feet from the glass. C. L.

There are no carnations that will do their best planted in a rose house, and I would not advise you to plant carnations in a house which must be run to suit the roses. However, the one variety that will suffer perhaps less than any other under those conditions is Mrs. Lawson. This variety will also keep about as short as any I know of and two and one-half feet of head room will do very well for it. Flora Hill will stand that temperature better than any other white except Gov. Wolcott, but the latter grows too tall for your bench. I would not propagate my next season's stock from that bench either, because you will find the cuttings less vigorous than those grown in a lower temperature and with more air than you dare give your roses. I have seen this tried a number of times, but never with much success, and by good growers, too. A. F. J. BAUR.

TUBEROUS ROOTED BEGONIAS.

Very near our front door is a bed of these handsome flowering plants. The bed is about nine feet in diameter. It has been quite amusing to sit on the veranda of a summer evening and hear the dear old ladies from the rural districts pronounce them almost everything but what they are. This beautiful bedding plant has been lately written up in the columns of the REVIEW and the undersigned has often declared his belief that in beauty and variety of color and form they far surpass a bed of the most brilliant geraniums.

The corms were bought of an eastern house as "good mixed" at a cost of 2 or 3 cents each. Some of the single blossoms are more than five inches across. Some are double and almost every shade of color is represented, except blue. From deepest crimson to purest white, all shades of scarlet, red and pink and richest orange to primrose yellow, all are there.

This little bed has the doubtful benefit of the partial shade from an elm tree. We have seen, in the Buffalo parks, better beds of begonias than this and in the fullest sun.

These plants were started in flats at the end of March. When a leaf or two and a few roots were made, they were potted into 3-inch and 4-inch pots, according to size and strength of plant, and plunged in a mild hot-bed, where they remained during May, with the glass off during the latter part of the month, and were planted out in the bed early in June. The bed has been most brilliant and attractive since the middle of June and I am sorry the photograph reproduced gives such a poor idea of the bloom and color.

Tuberous Begonias and other Interesting Specimens.

The fern in the background is an eight-inch pot plant of John Scott's nephrolepis. The two night blooming cereuses sitting under the kentia were not intended to be so conspicuous. To a casual observer they may appear of the same age, but they are not. Cultural directions for these will be dispensed with for the present. W. S.

ROSES.

Responsibility of Night Man.

As we are now approaching the season when steady firing at night will have to be resumed, our first care should be the selection of a suitable night man to whom we can delegate our responsibility for twelve out of the twenty-four daily hours. In the larger and most up-to-date establishments this functionary has of late years occupied his proper position, but in far too many of the smaller and medium-sized places any ordinary help is considered good enough for the position. Employers frequently select men who by reason of their physical defects are unable any longer to keep pace among the day hands.

It is unnecessary to say that this method of selection is seldom favored by either the foreman or section hands, who know that without a thoroughly qualified night man in charge their best efforts during the day are nullified and that all their care, skill and labor count for little when such a man takes charge.

The responsibilities which this man has to shoulder entitle him to a good salary, and to be able to earn it he must possess qualifications surpassing the ordinary day laborer who has always some one to guide him and to whom he can appeal for advice when in need.

The ideal night man must of necessity have a practical knowledge of the ordinary conditions required in a greenhouse and at the same time have a thorough knowledge of his heating plant, firing included. He must also have so much of a mechanical knowledge as to be able to make simple repairs, be able to judge quickly and accurately and have sense enough to know that the judgment of the foreman, who has the entire responsibility, is more likely to be more mature than his own, should be carried out to the letter, and in spirit, and that except in cases of emergency his nightly instructions should be carried out to the letter.

Above all, he must be strictly temperate. Avoid encouraging company in the boiler room. Company usually means card playing, with its concomitants. Smoking and drinking means neglect of duty and, however well intentioned the man may be, he usually after a while succumbs and loss occurs.

Select a good, trustworthy man, pay him well, treat him well and it will pay you. RIBES.

OVER-WATERED ROSES.

I send some rose leaves and would like to have you tell me why they turn so light colored and what to do to prevent it. C. H.

The reason why these leaves have assumed this shade of color is not far to seek. They have been over-watered and chilled during the night and exposed to too high a temperature during the day. To prevent this condition water early and judiciously; give plenty of ventilation. Take particular care that the houses are freely aired during the night, even though firing has to be kept up all night. By this method you will have a sweet atmosphere in the house, preventing that heavy condensation which must have prevailed in your rose houses every morning. RIBES.

TROUBLE OF A YOUNG GROWER.

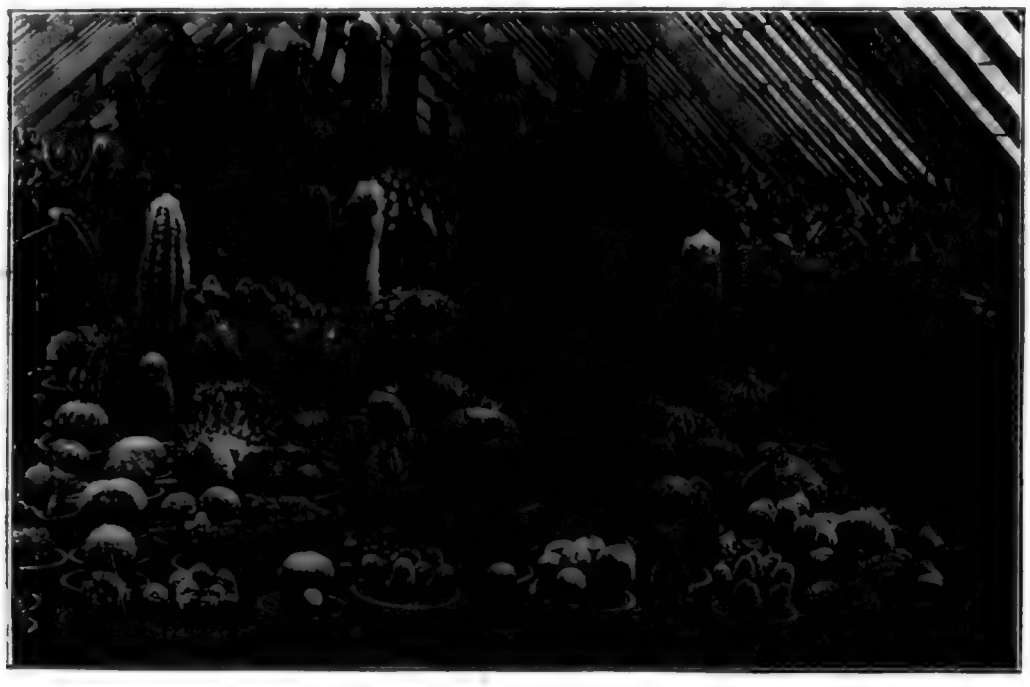
I have one house of Brides and Maids planted in solid beds. Some of these plants are several years old, having been cut back each summer, rested and then started again. During the early part of July I commenced drying them off gradually. At the end of two weeks I cut them back to about six inches from the surface of the beds and rubbed off the shading on the glass. I was absent for a few days and during that time my employer gave the roses a good watering, having forgotten that they were still resting. Shortly after that the eyes began to break and shoots made their appearance.

The soil being exhausted, I was anxious to have it removed and a new top dressing put on and as the shoots were growing rapidly, I made all haste to do this. We removed about two and a half or three inches between the rows, disturbing the roots as little as possible, but during this operation we were interrupted several times and in order to keep the sun from drying the soil and any protruding roots I gave the benches a light watering. Unfortunately no compost had been prepared and so we were obliged to cut and mix our soil and manure as it was carried in, using equal parts of good fresh clay loam and well rotted cow manure with a little bone meal and lime added. This top dressing has now been on the benches about ten days and the young foliage has a very light green or yellow color and is rather thin.

I gave one watering after the dressing was put on and none since, only syringing the plants on bright days and damping the walks and woodwork. The ventilators are wide open on all favorable occasions and at night are open about four or five inches; warm nights more. There is no shading on the glass at present. No steam has been turned on yet and during rainy or sultry weather we have used sulphur to check mildew.

Can you tell me what the trouble is, and how to remedy same? Should the soil be tamped or firmed?

On one bench quite a number of plants had died out last winter and so I removed about six or seven inches of soil in those places and today planted young plants from 4-inch pots in that space, using fresh clay loam with one-quarter cow manure. These young roses had been out of doors all summer and appear quite healthy, the foliage being dark in color and quite tough. Shall I treat them just like June-planted stock?



I have had three years' experience in roses, carnations, violets, mums, etc., and your notes on roses have been very helpful to me and put into practice whenever possible. I am deeply interested in all my work, but find it very hard and often discouraging to grow stock under existing unfavorable conditions. This is the only greenhouse plant here in a town of 6,500 and if I stay here this winter I want to get those roses in shape again and if you can help me will be very grateful to you. I came here last fall and turned out good roses and carnations last winter. W. R. D.

One reason why these roses failed to do well apparently lies in the fact that the soil was not removed before root action was started. As I have frequently pointed out in my notes, any operation which is likely to in any way interfere with the roots should be done while they are as nearly dormant as possible.

Another, and I think the most immediate cause of the trouble, can be ascribed to the use of lime and bone in combination in the mulch. There can be little doubt but that this is the reason of the thin, discolored foliage. Lime is to most rose soils very beneficial, and so is bone meal, but the use of the two in combination releases more ammonia than even a strong, healthy rose in all its vigor can find use for, and consequently the effect on stock just started must be very detrimental.

To remedy this state of matters, after the stock has absorbed so much poison, is no easy matter. The mulch should be removed as quickly as possible and a lighter one composed of equal parts of decomposed cow manure and good fibrous loam substituted. The soil should be kept moderately dry and the temperature below 56° at night when possible, with abundance of ventilation at all times.

The recently planted young stock will succeed under the treatment as recommended for June-planted stock. RIBES.

Latest Addition to Cactus Collection at Fairmount Park, Philadelphia.

FAIRMOUNT PARK.

It was a beautiful August day, clear and cool, one of those rare days in midsummer that seem expressly intended for outdoor enjoyment. Horticultural Hall, the floricultural center of Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, stood out strongly in the morning light, with its high towers and curved glass sides, surrounded on every side by splendid trees, many from distant climes; beautiful green lawns, dotted with patches of brilliant color; smooth gravel walks and drives, and on the east the Schuylkill, flowing on to meet its sister river beyond the great city. The picture is dear to every true Philadelphian and one that especially appeals to the florist with true love for his chosen calling.

The first thing to do after a few moments given to sentiment is to find the manager and get from him a few practical ideas that may be of use to florists and gardeners. Xavier E. Schmitt, who has had charge of the extensive greenhouses and grounds about the hall for the past four years, was hard at work potting "cyps," a job that was courteously postponed to do the honors of the place for an old comrade of many years' standing. The northern range of five greenhouses, each about 20x100 feet, contained part of a growing collection of orchids. A very promising lot of chrysanthemums, both in pots and planted out in the bench, a creamy white variety, New York, was pointed out as a good thing, not often seen elsewhere. An interesting lot of small agaves was pointed out.

Here came the presentation with due solemnity to the chief, Oglesby B. Paul, who succeeded the late Charles H. Miller as landscape gardener to the park, a position of importance, demanding knowledge, taste and originality of ideas.

At the east end of the hall figures representing the centennial and present years and maltese crosses are prettily laid out on the terrace with echeverias and alternantheras, a novel edge to the white stone steps being made with golden coleus and Eranthemum atropurpureum. Across the driveway, opposite these main entrance steps, are the crescent and surrounding cactus beds illustrated, the feature of the east end planting. The effect is very striking, the tall, slender cacti standing erect like sentinels, each exactly in the proper position on the many-hued carpet of alternanthera and echeveria. There are many varieties of cacti in the collection, some of them very rare. A large addition was received from the south this season, as shown in illustration of winter quarters.

Three varieties of alternanthera furnish the necessary colors: Brilliantissima, an improvement on paronychioides major and amœna spectabilis; Prospect Park, a dark rich shade, reminding one of a little of versicolor, and aurea nana, green and gold.

In echeverias, the old secunda glauca has been discarded as too "weedy," although another sort under the same name finds favor. E. imbricata is prized for its silver foliage and its erect habit. E. rosacea is a favorite among the flat varieties. E. sanguineum, E. metallica and a variety called, I think, E. globosa extensa, are very pretty.

Here the park guard's third whistle compelled even ardent plant lovers to recollect that the paymaster must not be kept waiting. After a short intermission, the parterre, or sunken garden, running from the west end of the hall toward George's Hill, was next admired.

Cactus Bedding near Horticultural Hall, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia.

It is a beautiful piece of work, presenting a life-like variety of color that must be seen to be appreciated. The beds are laid out on the grass in a series of ovals, circles and bands with graceful festoons on the sloping sides. In geraniums, Le Pilot is the leading scarlet. Alphonse Ricard is on trial. Madame Thibaut, formerly the best bedding pink, so-called, is out of favor. La Favorite has replaced Swan as the best white. The varieties of coleus are Verschaffeltii, Queen Victoria, Golden Bedder and another and stronger yellow, called, I think, Golden Prince.

Achyranthes Lindenii and Stevia serrata variegata, once so popular here, have been replaced by Eranthemum atropurpureum and Abutilon Duke of Malakoff. Acalypha tricolor is much more prominent than of yore. In masses it rivals fine beds of crotons in richness and brilliancy of coloring.

The economic house was in excellent condition. Some recently added cattleyas and other orchids were in bloom, also a fine plant of African violet, Saintpaulia ionantha, with a profusion of small, deep blue flowers, but with foliage suggestive of the gloxinia. Some twenty-five new varieties of marantas have lately been acquired. Some root pruned and freshly potted specimens were enjoying such an excessively high degree of humidity that a retreat was too soon demanded by the weakness of the flesh.

The lawns and herbaceous gardens outside were in excellent condition, the phloxes and rudbeckia adding richness to the effect. PHIL.

WITH BOSTON GROWERS.

Wm. H. Elliott, Brighton, Mass.

William H. Elliott, of Brighton, has for a number of years been one of the largest and most successful growers for the Boston market. In at least one of his specialties he has acquired a national reputation; that is, in the culture of Asparagus plumosus. A number of lofty houses, one or two of them thirty-five feet high, are devoted to asparagus, and Mr. Elliott ships extensively. He has thousands of fine strings fit for market. Asparagus Sprengeri fills several houses and quantities of plants are being grown in the field and will be lifted shortly. Chrysanthemums were noted in quantity outdoors. Several thousands are grown in bush form and find a ready market, mostly in 7-inch pots. Varieties included such old popular sorts as Bonnaffon, Ivory, Midge, Sunderbruch, Mrs. J. E. Neville and others. No single stems are grown at all.

Roses have always been one of Mr. Elliott's specialties. In the culture of these he has been eminently successful. Quite a number of houses are devoted to these, varying from 100 to 480 feet in length. Varieties grown are Bride, Bridesmaid, Liberty, Kaiserin and Carnot. Several houses of the two latter sorts were giving a grand lot of blooms, stems long and stout. Liberty is well liked here. Grafted plants seemed to show no particular advantage over own-root stock. Beauties are little grown here now, being handled at Mr. Elliott's farm near Dover, N. H., where he recently erected an 800-foot house. We noted that solid beds were being substituted for raised benches in the largest house of Brides and Maids.

C. F. Holbrow, Brighton, Mass.

C. F. Holbrow, of Brighton, grows a general line of stock, including decorative plants. Several houses are devoted to roses, Brides and Bridesmaids being exclusively grown. In carnations, Fair Maid is a prime favorite. As at Mr. Elliott's, the houses here are built on a side hill. In Mr. Holbrow's case the hill is very steep and it entails many steps and considerable climbing.

Wm. Sim, Cliftondale, Mass.

During the past winter and spring finer sweet peas and violets were placed on the Boston market than ever before. We doubt very much if any of the noted Rhinebeck growers grew such violets, and certainly no finer sweet peas were produced in America. The grower of these remarkable flowers was a modest, unassuming, but nevertheless canny Aberdenian Scotchman, at Cliftondale, Mass., named William Sim. A visit to the establishment is interesting and profitable. It shows that Mr. Sim is distinctly a specialist, and the days of specialists are not over, whatever croakers may say to the contrary.

He has been located at his present stand a little over five years, and surely his trim, well-kept grounds and clean, thrifty stock grown in ideal houses attest his perseverance, hard work and skill. A new house 30x360 was just being completed at the time of our visit. Although not designed or built by any greenhouse architect, this is a model of what a commercial house should be. Height is fifteen feet to the ridge. Steam heating is all along the sides. Sweet peas Mont Blanc and Earliest of All are planted in rows six feet apart lengthwise of this house. Later Princess of Wales violets are set between the rows and give a good picking until the sweet peas shade them too much. A house of similar size now devoted to cucumbers will also be planted with sweet peas.

Chrysanthemums fill four large houses, 75,000 single-stemmed plants being grown. These are in splendid condition. They include large batches of such useful market sorts as Ivory, Bonnaffon, White Bonnaffon, Wanamaker (still a favorite here), A. J. Balfour, Mrs. Coombes, Timothy Eaton and Yellow Eaton, Appleton, Perrin, Shrimpton, Monrovia, Halliday and others. A considerable number of the newer sorts, such as Dr. Enguehard, Duckham, Mrs. Thirkell, Ethel Fitzroy, Vallis, Henry Barnes and Mildred Ware are being grown. We hope Mr. Sim will exhibit in Boston next November, as we believe he intends to do.

Two houses are devoted to tomatoes. Stone filled one and Rochford the other. These had been giving heavy crops, five tons having been taken from a house of Stone 200 feet long and many fruits remained. Outdoors, trained to single stems, 6,000 plants are grown. These are all planted from pots and give a very early, profitable crop.

The chrysanthemum and tomato houses, as well as a number of long frames, are filled with Princess of Wales violets later, of which 60,000 are grown. Everything on Mr. Sim's place, particularly under glass, was scrupulously clean, no weeds visible at all. His attention to these details is something that many other florists might well emulate.

POINT JUDGING.

Various suggestions have been made during the past few years for so modifying methods of judging as to give the competing collections awards more closely approximating their relative values than is possible when three prizes are given in the classes in accordance with the orthodox practice, says the Gardeners' Magazine. For several years past the Beddington, Carshalton and Wallington Horticultural Society has provided a class for vegetables in which the prizes are awarded to the collections in exact accordance with their relative merits, and the competition invariably gives rise to much interest among both exhibitors and visitors. This class is set apart for nine distinct kinds, and it is stipulated that "six prizes, amounting to £5 in the aggregate, will be divided proportionately with the points of merit awarded to the collections." At the society's exhibition held on Monday there was as usual a strong competition, there being ten entries all more or less meritorious. The best six collections were selected by the judges, and the produce pointed with the following results: First prize, 59 points; second prize, 52 points; third prize, 51 points; fourth prize, 50½ points; fifth prize, 49 points; and sixth prize, 44 points. It will thus be seen that the difference in the value of the prizes awarded to the several exhibitors was very small, more particularly between the fourth and fifth. This method of judging necessarily requires great care, and occupies much time. This latter point is perhaps the most objectionable as if the method were general a small army of censors would have to be employed, because of the time occupied in determining the point value of each product in the collections, and then entering up the points. We cannot, therefore, suggest the adoption of the system in awarding the prizes in the whole of the classes at a show, but there is so much that is interesting associated with the method that the provision of one or two classes to be judged in accordance therewith can be strongly recommended.

HEDGES OF SEVERAL KINDS.

We have a customer who wants about 400 feet of hedge planted around a lot, leaving the front open. What sort of hedge would you recommend as being the most suitable for the winter climate of Minnesota, and also the most ornamental and best growing? Kindly give us a brief outline of different kinds and also best time of planting and pruning.

E. S. F.

It is seldom we are assigned such a lucid inquiry or a more interesting subject, one to which we willingly take off our hat and yet expand our chest and say with pleasure, "Ah, my dear fellow, I have an opinion."

Hedges are planted for different purposes. Sometimes to exclude the sight or trespassing of a neighbor, or his children, or his dogs. Sometimes you see the hedge take the form of a brick wall called a spite fence. This is deplorable and is very infrequent in this liberal and broad-minded country. Sometimes a hedge is planted as a shelter from a prevailing cold wind, but more often they are planted as a dividing property line and in a belief that they are an adornment to the grounds.

A well-kept hedge, even if in a landscape gardeners' view it is out of place, cannot seriously offend the eye, but a naked, scrawny, badly-kept hedge is an abomination. If a dense hedge is desired, something that will repel sight and neighbors and winter's cold blast, then an evergreen hedge is the thing.

There are three evergreens (properly conifers) inexpensive and very suitable for this purpose, viz., the familiar Norway spruce, the American arbor-vitae (Thuya occidentalis) and the hemlock spruce (Abies Canadensis). The latter, although seldom seen as a hedge, is far the best in every respect. It is more dense, more graceful, less formal and better all around. If you are sure these evergreens have been transplanted in the nursery within two years, then you can buy trees three feet high, but if you are not sure of that, then start with small trees not over eighteen inches high.

If your hedge is merely to define your property line and incidentally to be an ornament to your grounds, the deciduous hedge is to be preferred. They are more easily and successfully made to grow and flourish. Many of our hardy deciduous shrubs can be used for the purpose. Two that are seldom used, but can be, are the cydonia (the Japan quince) and Hydrangea paniculate. The latter could not be pruned to any formal outline in summer, but is glorious when in flower and can be, and should be, pruned back hard in spring.

The cydonia makes a beautiful hedge if pruned after flowering in the month of June. It adapts itself to the closest shearing, is brilliant with its scarlet flowers in early spring and its thorny growth makes it impenetrable even to a tom-cat visiting a friend. It is, however, of slow growth.

The privet is the favorite hedge shrub of the north, and just let me say here that the beautiful California privet so much planted of late received a death blow last winter. In New York, Boston and all latitudes north of those cities, it was killed outright or cut to the ground. The only privet for you to plant in Minnesota is Ligustrum vulgare, commonly known as the English privet, hardy in Labrador. It makes a dense hedge and is easily managed.

And now we come to the last and, perhaps, taking the whole season through the prettiest, most useful and hardiest of all our hedge shrubs, Berberis Thunbergii. It is beautiful anywhere and at all seasons and if you don't want a hedge over three or four feet high and one that is not too formal and wants little clipping or attention, by all means plant Berberis Thunbergii.

About care, broadly I will say that all hedges are planted thickly and to keep in vigorous health some animal manure should be forked into the ground on each side of the hedge every two years. The prevailing mistake, particularly with the privet, is to expect a hedge three feet high the year it is planted. It can't be done. I would call an ideal evergreen hedge, after years of growth, one that was five or six feet high, four feet wide at the base, two feet wide at the top and the top rounding. Whatever hedge it is, let it be tapering to the top, so that all parts of it get the sun, the dews and the rain.

Briefly, the care of these different trees and shrubs is: Evergreens, plant at the end of May or just when the young growth is starting. Mid-summer or after the spring growth is made is the time to prune evergreens. Use knife, not shears, and only cut back leading growths. From two to three feet apart is the distance to plant, according to size of tree.

The privet, no matter how strong you obtain them, should be cut down at planting to within six inches of the ground and if you gain one foot in height each succeeding year you are allowing plenty. Prune with the shears early in the spring and, if you desire great trimness, again in early August.

The berberis does not want much pruning at any time, either at planting or afterwards. It has a compact, neat growth and can only be improved each spring by a few of the strongest growths being shortened back. The cydonia is also compact and bushy but will stand the shears, which should only be used just after it has flowered in the spring.

All the evergreens and shrubs I have mentioned are hardy in Minnesota. Plant privet, berberis or cydonia nine or ten inches apart and don't start with too large shrubs. Small plants will make the better hedge. The privet, cydonia and berberis are so hardy they can be transplanted in October or early November, yet there is not much gained by fall planting and you run some risk. As soon as the ground can be worked in the spring is the best time for deciduous shrubs.

HYDRANGEAS AND GERANIUMS.

Enclosed you will find sample of leaves of hydrangea that I planted in a large bed on a lawn. I do not understand what makes the leaves turn brown on the edge. I wish you would tell me the cause of this and how to remedy it. I also enclose geranium leaves that blight and turn brown. Please give me your idea as to the cause of this.

W. T. L.

The leaves sent are those of H. paniculata grandiflora. We never saw leaves of this fine shrub troubled with any blight. Although W. T. L. does not say so, we suppose the bed was planted this spring and is not yet very well supplied with working roots, and as the hot weather came some exhaustion would take place and the oldest leaves would naturally be the first to succumb. We don't think there is anything else the matter. Just let me say to W. T. L. that in its native surroundings this shrub or dwarf tree may make a very picturesque bush without the interference of man and his knife. Yet as a cultivated shrub if you want fine flowers and a fine bush the growth of this summer should next spring be cut back three or four eyes.

The zonal geranium leaves sent were too much dried up to say much about them. We think for the past thirty years we have occasionally seen geraniums attacked in the same way. What to call it I am unable to say. If it was a fungoid disease it would, I suppose, show on the surface of the leaf, which it does not. A decay of the tissue takes place and, therefore, is it not a bacterial disease? I am asking the question because I am not certain. We have seen the same trouble on some varieties of zonals in the spring when the soil was exhausted and the roots began to perish and this year we noticed it on a lot of Mrs. Francis Perkins (the fine pink), for the first six weeks after being planted out. They were starved in the pots before being planted out and took some time to get growing.

I have never heard of any attempted cure for this decay of the foliage, except the best of all cures, viz., proper conditions. Select the healthiest cuttings and give plenty of light and air during winter and a night temperature of 40 to 45 degrees is plenty high enough during the dark days and very little water is needed. Over-watering these succulent plants in a low temperature and dark weather is often the cause of decay and rot among geraniums. If I wanted to propagate from these plants this fall I would cut them hard back and look for a clean, healthy, new growth.

THE FLORISTS' REFRIGERATOR.

In the prosperous town of Kendallville, Ind., there is a big refrigerator factory, with branches in many cities, which has so high an appreciation of the desirability of florists' patronage that they make a consistent effort to present their wares to the attention of our trade. The result is that these ice boxes are found in flower stores from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The display illustrated in this issue, that of the McCray Refrigerator Co., was the only exhibit of florists' refrigerators at the S. A. F. convention at St. Louis.

They showed a No. 610 with glass front and ends, arranged with center icing system. They also showed a No. 675, four doors, with glass front and wood ends, with side icing system. On these refrigerators the ice chamber door is fitted with a French bevel plate mirror and the entire interior is enameled in white, except the floor, which is covered with galvanized iron. They also exhibited a glass lined refrigerator and a family ice box.

These display boxes were stock sizes such as are on hand at all times and not built specially for show. The company, however, does a large business in building florists' refrigerators to order to suit the space or style of decorations or ornamentations.

Vegetable Forcing.

LAWRENCE BECKER, Rogers Park, Chicago, after growing carnations for a number of years, put his place in lettuce last season and prospered so well that he is now adding 20,000 feet of glass to his place.

CUCUMBERS.

If not already started, seeds of cucumbers for the first indoor crop should be planted without delay. The best place for starting the seeds will be in the greenhouse, though we have been quite successful in starting them in cold frames. It is easier to give them the necessary attention in the greenhouse, also easier to regulate the heat and atmospheric moisture. Bottom heat is not absolutely necessary to insure a good start, but it is all the better to have heat at command in case of a damp, cold spell, when without it germination would be slow and quite a few of the seeds might rot.

The seeds may be planted singly or, to make more certain, plant two in each pot and remove one after they are well up. A light, free compost should be used for filling the pots. One composed of equal parts of loam, leaf-mold and fine sand should answer the purpose well. Use 2½-inch pots, fill loosely level and insert the seed with the thin or wedge-shaped end down, deep enough so that the upper end will just be covered. Then press the soil moderately firm around the seed.

Pack the pots in flats as close as they will stand and set the flats in the house. Thus they are much easier to move around and don't take up much more space. If the soil is moderately moist it will hardly be necessary to apply water right away, and, unless fire heat is used, the moisture in the soil ought to be sufficient until the seeds are started, providing the house is kept as close as possible, and the atmosphere kept moderately charged with moisture.

W. S. CROYDON.

CAULIFLOWER.

The time of sowing these will depend upon when the plants are required to be large enough for planting in the benches. It is quite a usual custom to follow chrysanthemums with this crop and if this is the intention there is no immediate hurry about sowing, as under favorable conditions the plants ought to be large enough to plant in the bench in from six to seven weeks from the time the seed is sown. There is no advantage in having the plants large. One experience is that small plants invariably succeed better than large ones, as they suffer less check and take hold of the soil much quicker. We make a sowing about this time for frame work and from this sowing we seldom fail to reap a very satisfactory crop during the month of December.

The seeds may be either sown in flats or in a frame. In either case the plants should be pricked over once before the nine distinct kinds, and it is stipulated that "six prizes, amounting to £5 in the aggregate, will be divided proportionately with the points of merit awarded to the collections." At the society's exhibition held on Monday there was as usual a strong competition, there being ten entries all more or less meritorious. It will thus be seen that the difference in the value of the prizes awarded to the several exhibitors was very small, more particularly between the fourth and fifth. This method of judging necessarily requires great care, and occupies much time. This latter point is perhaps the most objectionable as if the method were general a small army of censors would have to be employed, because of the time occupied in determining the point value of each product in the collections, and then entering up the points. We cannot, therefore, suggest the adoption of the system in awarding the prizes in the whole of the classes at a show, but there is so much that is interesting associated with the method that the provision of one or two classes to be judged in accordance therewith can be strongly recommended.

I find this the most satisfactory manure for this crop; they don't seem to take kindly to commercial fertilizers, though if extra fine heads are desired a little nitrate of soda watered into the soil after the heads have begun to form will be of considerable assistance to their development. The best variety to use for this and also for greenhouse work is Snowball, but, as there are several strains of this on the market, it is well to procure the seed from a thoroughly reliable source to make sure of getting the genuine dwarf variety.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Flowers have sold exceptionally well the past week and there is a distinct improvement in the market as compared with a year ago. The warm weather has caused a heavier output of roses, but prices, except for the poorer grades, have maintained previous quotations. Beauties are coming with nice stems and there are some excellent Kaiserin and Carnot. Carnations of the new indoor crop, as well as from field, are now coming in more freely. Good flowers readily bring $2 and some whites went as high as $3. Scott, Saxon (scarlet), The Queen and Fair Maid are very good from the open. Quite a number of the old Mrs. Fisher are also seen.

A good many dahlias are now coming in. The cactus varieties take the best, some selling at $1.50 to $2 per 100. Some of the white pompons are also in demand for design work. Asters are of a little better quality, but inferior to other seasons. Some fine Semple's bring $1.50 per 100, other sorts 50 cents to $1. Sweet peas at 15 cents per 100 and feverfew 15 cents per bunch are still fairly abundant. The first named seem to have taken on a new lease of life. Lilium speciosum, gladioli, tuberoses, marguerites and stocks are among other flowers in the market. So far the new season may be classed as quite satisfactory. Chrysanthemums will soon appear, a few blooms being already open in some establishments.

Various Notes.

David Weir is in St. Louis, taking in the beauties of the World's Fair.

Geo. E. Buxton has completed the changes in his heating plant and other improvements and has all his carnations housed and looking first-class.

W. L. Lewis has evidently secured a capable manager in Mr. Gardner. Carnations never looked better and his general stock is in fine shape.

Messrs. Wm. Nicholson, M. A. Patten and Peter Fisher offer special carnation prizes at the coming chrysanthemum show in Boston.

E. A. Riggs, gardener to E. A. Clark, of Jamaica Plains, has a fine lot of single-stemmed chrysanthemums, including all the best new sorts. He was a successful exhibitor in Boston last year.

J. Montgomery Sears, of Southboro, the largest individual owner of real estate in Boston, has set aside fifty acres of his farm to be made into a pleasure park, with the idea of interesting other wealthy property owners in similar enterprises. His plan includes landscape gardening, flower gardens and a zoo.

The brown tail moth caterpillars hatched from eggs laid in July are working destruction on tender foliage just now in Boston and vicinity. Little can be done in the way of remedial measures now, but these same caterpillars, if not destroyed with their nests during the winter, will issue forth next May and June and cause widespread destruction.

The promoters of the new co-operative market feel much encouraged with the results of their sale of stalls on August 31. There was a large attendance at the auction and 110 out of 170 stalls were disposed of at an average of $30. First choice went to Charles Cummings, of Woburn, at $55, several others going at the same price. Sixty stalls were sold at prices ranging from $40 down to $15. The latter price was given for any choice left. So far as location is concerned the new enterprise has a distinct advantage over the old market and will undoubtedly catch considerable trade from the central location. At holiday times it will, however, be difficult to move goods in quantity in a hurry. There are quite a number of applicants for the post of manager of the new market, but no selection has yet been made.

Colored varieties of field-grown carnations are in good demand. J. H. Manley is hardly procurable.

The auction sale of stalls at the Boston Co-operative Flower Market on Columbus avenue took place on September 3. The results were considered quite satisfactory. Quite a number of growers purchased stalls in both markets.

We are experiencing a very dry spell at present and vegetation is suffering more than at any time this season. Water supplies are running low in many places and a soaking rain is much needed.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

This is the calm preceding the storm of business which it is confidently hoped October will usher in. A comparison with the record of other years at this date shows no marked change. It is the old story of dullness repeated yearly, to which the wholesalers have become accustomed, and which they have learned to endure with placidity.

There is little change for the better this week. The supply is abundant in all lines and in asters, gladioli and dahlias the aggregate is an enigma unsolvable. The street merchants will be welcomed at their old stands to relieve the congestion. The middle of the month will see the closing of many of the adjacent summer resorts and the return of these nomadic florists. There are plenty of medium and short roses on which it would be a shame to quote clearing prices. Orchids are always in demand and the American market for them is established in New York and is likely to be so considered for a generation. The supply is always to be depended on, the quality and variety unsurpassed and a steady call is growing in extent and dependence that places them beyond the risk of speculation.

Retail windows everywhere are brilliant with gladioli and hydrangeas. Never were the latter so extensively used and so distinctive, the flower heads being enormous and their utility never so much in evidence.

Various Notes.

Alex. J. Guttman, the wholesale florist, has bought C. H. Hagert's greenhouse establishment at Summit, N. J., with ten acres of land and has here the nucleus of an extensive business. Everything is in ship-shape condition for immediate utility and in two weeks roses will be shipped to the New York headquarters. His brother wholesalers congratulate him on his enterprise and wish him success.

Charles Millang has purchased a home near his mother's residence, with ample room for his horses, dog kennels and other side enterprises and recreations that make life worth living.

George Saltford is back from his extended outing and pastoral visitations at and around Rhinebeck, the fruit of which will doubtless be seen at no distant date.

W. H. Gunther is now giving his growers his annual fraternal after a month at Seagirt with his family, in the best of health and ready for the best season in his career, of which this is his seventeenth year.

Across the way from this enterprising quartette, George Cotsonas & Co., the green goods men, will shortly open their increasing business center so that Twenty-ninth street makes no uncertain sound as a component part of the great wholesale cut flower section of the city.

Jas. A. Hammond has joined the army of suburbanites and now makes Summit, N. J., his home. His contiguity to the army of New Jersey rose growers will add to his shipping supply the coming season.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Langjahr were the rear guard of the conventionists, wisely devoting over a week to the Fair and returning unsatisfied, as did all who enjoyed the glories and realized that a month would hardly suffice to "touch the hem of its garment."

Wm. A. Gardeen, of Thorley's, has gone to Fair Haven for his month's vacation.

Arthur Hunt, with Langjahr, is rejoicing in the addition of a prospective wholesaler to his family.

John Reickert, of Union Hill, who has been very ill with pleurisy and typhoid fever, is slightly better and his recovery is hoped for. A loss in weight from 225 pounds to 140 indicates the severe strain he has endured.

Both president and vice-president of the New York Florists' Club are indudging in hay fever. It is, therefore, appropriate that at the first meeting of the club for the fall season next Monday evening, the exhibition should include hardy and half-hardy herbaceous flowers and plants. Secretary Young will receive and care for anything that may be sent for the purpose and shippers are requested to forward promptly to his address, 51 West Twenty-eighth street. The meeting should be one of rare interest. Every member of the club should be present.

J. K. Allen is home again, satisfied that this is the only country. His comparisons are glowing in favor of America and he has seen enough of foreign lands to declare he would "rather have one year of New York than all eternity in Europe."

Kasting's exhibit of Croweanum in St. Louis was far-reaching in its influence. The demand in New York shows a steady increase and John I. Raynor, who controls its sale here, finds a constantly growing appreciation of its beauty and value.

Alex McConnell received from the American Press of New York city a large order last week for the funeral of the vice-president of the association, Mr. Cummings. Golden Gates and orchids were used profusely in the elaborate designs.

The country places are not exempt from the enterprising floral burglar this fall. John Lewis Childs is the latest victim, at Floral Park, L. I., horticultural books and valuable plants being stolen.

George Bast, one of the oldest landscape gardeners of Prospect park, died last week, aged 79 years.

The great flower show to be given under the direction of the American Institute is beginning to be a topic of general conversation. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Since the beginning of September trade has shown some activity. The approach of fall has put a smile on the face of the retailer, with the confidence that business is about to start in soon for good. The growers are all busy housing their carnations and putting their greenhouses in order for the fall trade. The growers around Kirkwood and Clayton report carnation plants in excellent shape. Building, too, is being pushed as much as possible so as to be ready for firing when the first frost comes.

The receipts of flowers at the wholesale houses are growing larger. Roses are coming with longer stems and buds much firmer. Bride, Meteor, Bridesmaid, Kaiserin, Liberty and Perle are most plentiful. The first of these are in good demand at $4 and $5 per 100. Shorter-stemmed ones do not bring over $2 per 100 and $10 in thousand lots. Beauties are looking better and are selling well. Fancy long are scarce at $3 to $4 per dozen.

Good carnations are still short in supply, with a big demand, especially for white. The best bring $2 per 100. Short outdoor stock does not bring over 75 cents per 100. Asters are again very plentiful, but only the large white and purple are selling well, at $2 per 100. Small truck, which is abundant, sells very cheap, 50 cents to $1 per 100. Tuberose stalks are coming in great quantities, selling as low as $1.50 per 100. There is very little sale for gladioli and the market is overstocked with them. Other outdoor stock is also overplentiful and so are all kinds of greens.

Various Notes.

Nurserymen report plenty of orders for fall delivery in fruit and shade trees. Planting will begin late next month.

F. R. Pierson, of Tarrytown, was a visitor last week. Robt. Craig, of Philadelphia, and W. R. Smith, of Washington, are still with us. Both are judges at the World's Fair in the floricultural department.

Park Commissioner Aull, Henry C. Ostertag and Sheriff Dickmann had a big time on the Pike one night last week. "Zink" and the others wound up in the Irish Village.

Fred H. Meinhardt is hard at work putting in a new Lord & Burnham boiler at his place in North St. Louis, also making other necessary repairs for the winter.

Max Rotter, on North Broadway, reports a splendid trade all summer, mostly funeral work but plenty of it.

Dr. A. S. Halstedt, president of the St. Clair Floral Co., at Belleville, called this week. The doctor reports that his new crimson seedling geranium is a sight worth seeing. He has named it St. Clair.

Fred Ostertag is back in the business again. He is now with his sister Mary, on Grand avenue.

John M. Hudson reports that he will re-enter the business this fall if a good opportunity presents. John says he felt like home during the convention, meeting so many of his old Philadelphia friends.

George Waldbart, Mrs. M. M. Ayres, Ellison Floral Co., and Mary Ostertag, who are located at Grand and Olive, report a good summer trade with World's Fair work.

Arthur Cowee, of Berlin, N. Y., is showing thousands of cut gladiolus spikes from his farm near Belleville, at the World's Fair, in the Horticulture building. This display attracts a big crowd of visitors every day. The display is in charge of Miss Hanson, who is always ready to answer all questions regarding gladioli. Mr. Cowee deserves great credit for such a grand display. Mrs. Hadkinson has charge of the grand fruit display of Nebraska. Her assistant, Mr. Ussic, of New York, is doing great work in this department.

Phil Hauswirth, of Chicago, is expected to spend a day with us this week on his way to St. Joseph to attend the annual Red Men's pow-wow. Phil is always a welcome visitor here.

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co., of Chicago, is sending to this market a fine lot of their large white asters, which are handled by Frank Ellis.

It is said that a grand chrysanthemum and floral exhibition will be held at the World's Fair, in the Horticulture building, during the month of November, the show to be under the auspices of our national society.

T. W. Guy, one of our old-time florists, was in town last week, visiting his son, E. W. Guy, in Belleville, and taking in the sights at the World's Fair.

The bed of the new canna, West Virginia, by Gus Obermeyer, of Parkersburg, W. Va., at the World's Fair, is in fine shape and attracts a great deal of attention from visiting florists.

A. G. Greiner felt very proud when he was told that he had received a bronze medal for his fine display of cacti, which attracted so much attention at the convention. Mr. Greiner devotes his whole time to growing cacti. He is ex-president of the St. Louis Cactus Society, which holds monthly meetings.

George Ostertag, who is now head man at Forest park, has the park looking in extra fine shape. George is the right man in the right place.

Wm. Schray & Sons' canna beds at the World's Fair are a fine sight. The judges have given them a medal for their display.

The second opening of Shaw's Garden to the public occurred Sunday. The attendance broke all previous records; 38,000 visitors passed through the gates. Ropes were stretched along the walks. The garden was in splendid shape, as many of our S. A. F. members know, for they visited the place a few weeks ago.

Tower Grove park which is close by, also had an overflow of visitors. Mr. Gurney and Phil Giebel were on hand to explain the beauties of this great park, where the rose gardens and the lily ponds are great attractions for the thousands of visitors in the city seeing the World's Fair.

For the vehicle parade at the World's Fair Fred C. Weber entered his hand-some outfit decorated with some 1,500 gladiolus spikes. The turnout was favorably commented upon by the big crowd in the stands.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Canfield, of Springfield, Ill., are attending the World's Fair this week and C. J. Ohmer, of Cincinnati, is here, spending most of his time on the Pike.

Bowling.

The Bowling Club started the match of fifteen games for the silver cup on Monday night. The members with a handicap rolled better than the scratch men, as the following scores will show:

TORONTO.

The Exposition.

The national industrial exposition held in Toronto from August 29 to September 10 is of great interest to all commercial lines in Canada, but on September 5 it was of special interest to the florists of Toronto and the surrounding country, it being the day that cut flowers and floral designs were exhibited. The interest displayed was very marked and competition keen, necessitating some very close judging. Wm. Scott, of Buffalo, officiated in the capacity of judge to the general satisfaction of all. The prizes awarded were as follows:

Hand or bridal bouquet, J. H. Dunlop, first; J. S. Simmons, second.

Floral design for the table, not exceeding two feet in diameter, J. H. Dunlop, first; Manton Bros., second; J. S. Simmons, third.

Funeral design, flat, fourteen inches in diameter or under, J. S. Simmons, first; J. H. Dunlop, second; Manton Bros., third.

Funeral design other than flat, gates ajar, frame not exceeding 30x30, J. H. Dunlop, first; J. S. Simmons, second; Manton Bros., third; Jay & Son, fourth.

Cut flowers, best basket, J. S. Simmons, first; J. H. Dunlop, second; Jay & Son, third.

Carnations, fifty blooms in one vase, any foliage, J. S. Simmons, first; Toronto Floral Co., second.

Roses, collection named, three of each, J. H. Dunlop, first; J. S. Simmons, second; Toronto Floral Co., third.

Roses, six of one variety, named, J. H. Dunlop, first; J. S. Simmons, second; Toronto Floral Co., third.

Roses, twenty any variety in one vase, arranged, J. H. Dunlop, first; J. S. Simmons, second; Toronto Floral Co., third.

Carnations, twenty blooms one variety, Toronto Floral Co., first.

In hardy annuals and perennials the exhibit was very large, many exhibitors coming a distance with their stuff. In the arrangement of plants as well as in the specimens Manton Bros. carried off many of the honors. Colonel Pellett, Exhibition park, Allan Gardens, Government House and Central Prison, put up some fine exhibits and prizes were fairly and evenly divided.

We noted among the visitors in town from distant points E. I. Mepsted and Chas. Wright, Ottawa; W. A. Adams, of S. A. Anderson, Buffalo, and Miss Scrim, Ottawa. D. J.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The quantity of fine flowers coming into town is increasing each week. This, with the large receipts of outdoor flowers, is more than the market can stand, the demand being as yet but slightly better than in August. These conditions cause greater waste than during the summer. There is some encouragement in comparison with last year's prices, which show a slight improvement on all flowers, except some of those grown out of doors.

Club Meeting.

At the meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia on Tuesday evening the present officers were renominated for another year. The president's reception will be held at the October meeting. Robert Craig read a paper on horticulture at the World's Fair, where he has been for some time officiating as a member of the jury of awards. He especially praised the Dreer exhibits and the beauty of their aquatics. Several others gave good descriptions of what they saw at St. Louis.

A Dahlia Farm.

It is curious to note the effect of a few words. Samuel S. Pennock remarked that he expected more dahlias and better dahlias than ever this season from L. K. Peacock, of Atco. So a party met at Market street wharf a little before 1 o'clock last Saturday afternoon, bound for the home of the dahlia. There were Joseph Fling, an amateur dahlia enthusiast; George Redles, who knows every flower, wild or tame of this or any other clime; Clarence Upton, who believes there is no flower to compare with the queen of flowers; C. F. Wurtzner, a true flower lover who should be a grower, and Phil, five in all.

After a good half hour "wasted" on the way down in dispatching certain rear cars to Gibbsboro and "Jericho," the train finally pulled up at Atco, where the dahlia king himself was in waiting to drive his guests out to his place. The grown men rode, while the boys preferred to walk. The two parties soon met at the farm.

It was as pretty a sight as one could wish to see. Row after row of dahlias, stretching away like a vast army in the field, the little patches of color that relieved the green giving the scene just the touch needed to enhance its beauty. The pompons were in full flower. Shapely little plants, the flowers on the same plant often varying markedly in shade, sometimes even in color. The large double sorts were just coming in bloom, but most of the best fancy, show and decorative varieties were either only in bud, with here and there a bloom, a promise of what would come later, or cut back to hold them back until the season opens, about the middle of this month.

Clifford W. Bruton, a fine yellow, looked well, being tall enough to insure good stems and well budded. Penelope, a soft pink and white, was very pleasing. Perle d'Or, creamy white, a grand flower resembling a fine chrysanthemum, is so highly prized that it is disbudded and given special care. It has good stems.

The cactus varieties were much admired, although not yet at their best. The singles held the visitors longest enthralled. There was Butterfly, a perfect little yellow, borne in rich profusion on plants of the glossiest green; Wurtzner's Joke, named on the spot from its oddities of color, pretty and most surprising; the famous Twentieth Century, a great flower of indescribable color; Pink Century, an enormous bloom that should light up splendidly at night; Scarlet Century, with color that would rival the scarlet Duc van Thol tulips, and so on ad infinitum through every variety of form, color and shade that one can imagine, with combinations galore.

"Have you a knife?" Mr. Peacock asked, and on its being offered him, "Now cut what you like." And they did. It makes one blush to think of it. "No one ever turned me loose in his larder before," Mr. Wurtzner remarked. It was certainly appreciated and when, just before train time, the well trained residents of the farm arose in numbers and gave their visitors little admonitory pricks that evening was approaching, a very happy party assembled to express their pleasure and say good-bye.

The farm consists of 102 acres. "I should have called it 100," Mr. Wurtzner remarked, "but he says he has the other two." There are about one and a half million bulbs planted out. Twenty thousand blooms is not an unusual morning's cut during the season.

The necessity for irrigation is so strongly felt that an order has just been placed for a great quantity of pipe to keep the stock moist during a drouth. The help number fifty-five during the busy season. Most of them are kept on all the year around.

Various Notes.

Wm. Swayne, of Kennet Square, Pa., has added one greenhouse 26x44 feet.

B. Eschner, of the M. Rice Co., has returned from a seven-weeks' business trip. He covered the entire territory between the Great Lakes and the Gulf for the first time and reports an increased demand. He was so busy at St. Louis that he was unable to get within three miles of the Fair, which does not seem strange when the responsibility of the firm's large exhibit at the convention is considered.

Walter P. Stokes is sending fine valley to Edward Reid.

George Burton is shipping fine Golden Gate to the Leo Niessen Co.

The Flower Market has the new quarters most attractively fitted up, the work being entirely done by the employes. In front is a fine exhibit of foliage plants from H. A. Dreer, at Riverton. All the stalls are now taken. Business seems active here.

Edward Towill, of Roslyn, Pa., is sending fine Liberties to S. S. Pennock.

Eugene Bernheimer is receiving new Beauties and Edgelys from the Floral Exchange, also field-grown blooms of Joost, Crocker and Fisher. He is now among the growers.

D. T. Conner, of Lord & Burnham Co., has his model greenhouse and boiler set up at the new Flower Market headquarters.

Jacob Becker is sending nice blooms of his Ideal rose to the Leo Niessen Co. This firm is receiving a fine lot of dahlias.

C. F. Edgar is away on a business trip.

Edward Reid left for Dakota this week. A. M. Campbell is in charge of the business. A new ice box over the rose cellar and new shelves give much needed extra space.

Fred J. Michell reports a shortage in Roman hyacinths and Paper White narcissi, with prices advancing. His firm has sent out more of these bulbs than in previous years.

Wm. Munro, of Lansdowne, Pa., is sending fine Kaiserins to Edgar & Co.

Wm. J. Baker enjoyed a short breathing spell at Atlantic City early this week.

John Berger was elected a member of the Florists' Club on Tuesday.

John Holmes, a well known gardener, died at the Germantown Hospital of appendicitis last week.

John F. Andre, Doylestown, is sending fine Beauties, Brides and Maids to Fred Ehret. PHIL.

CINCINNATI.

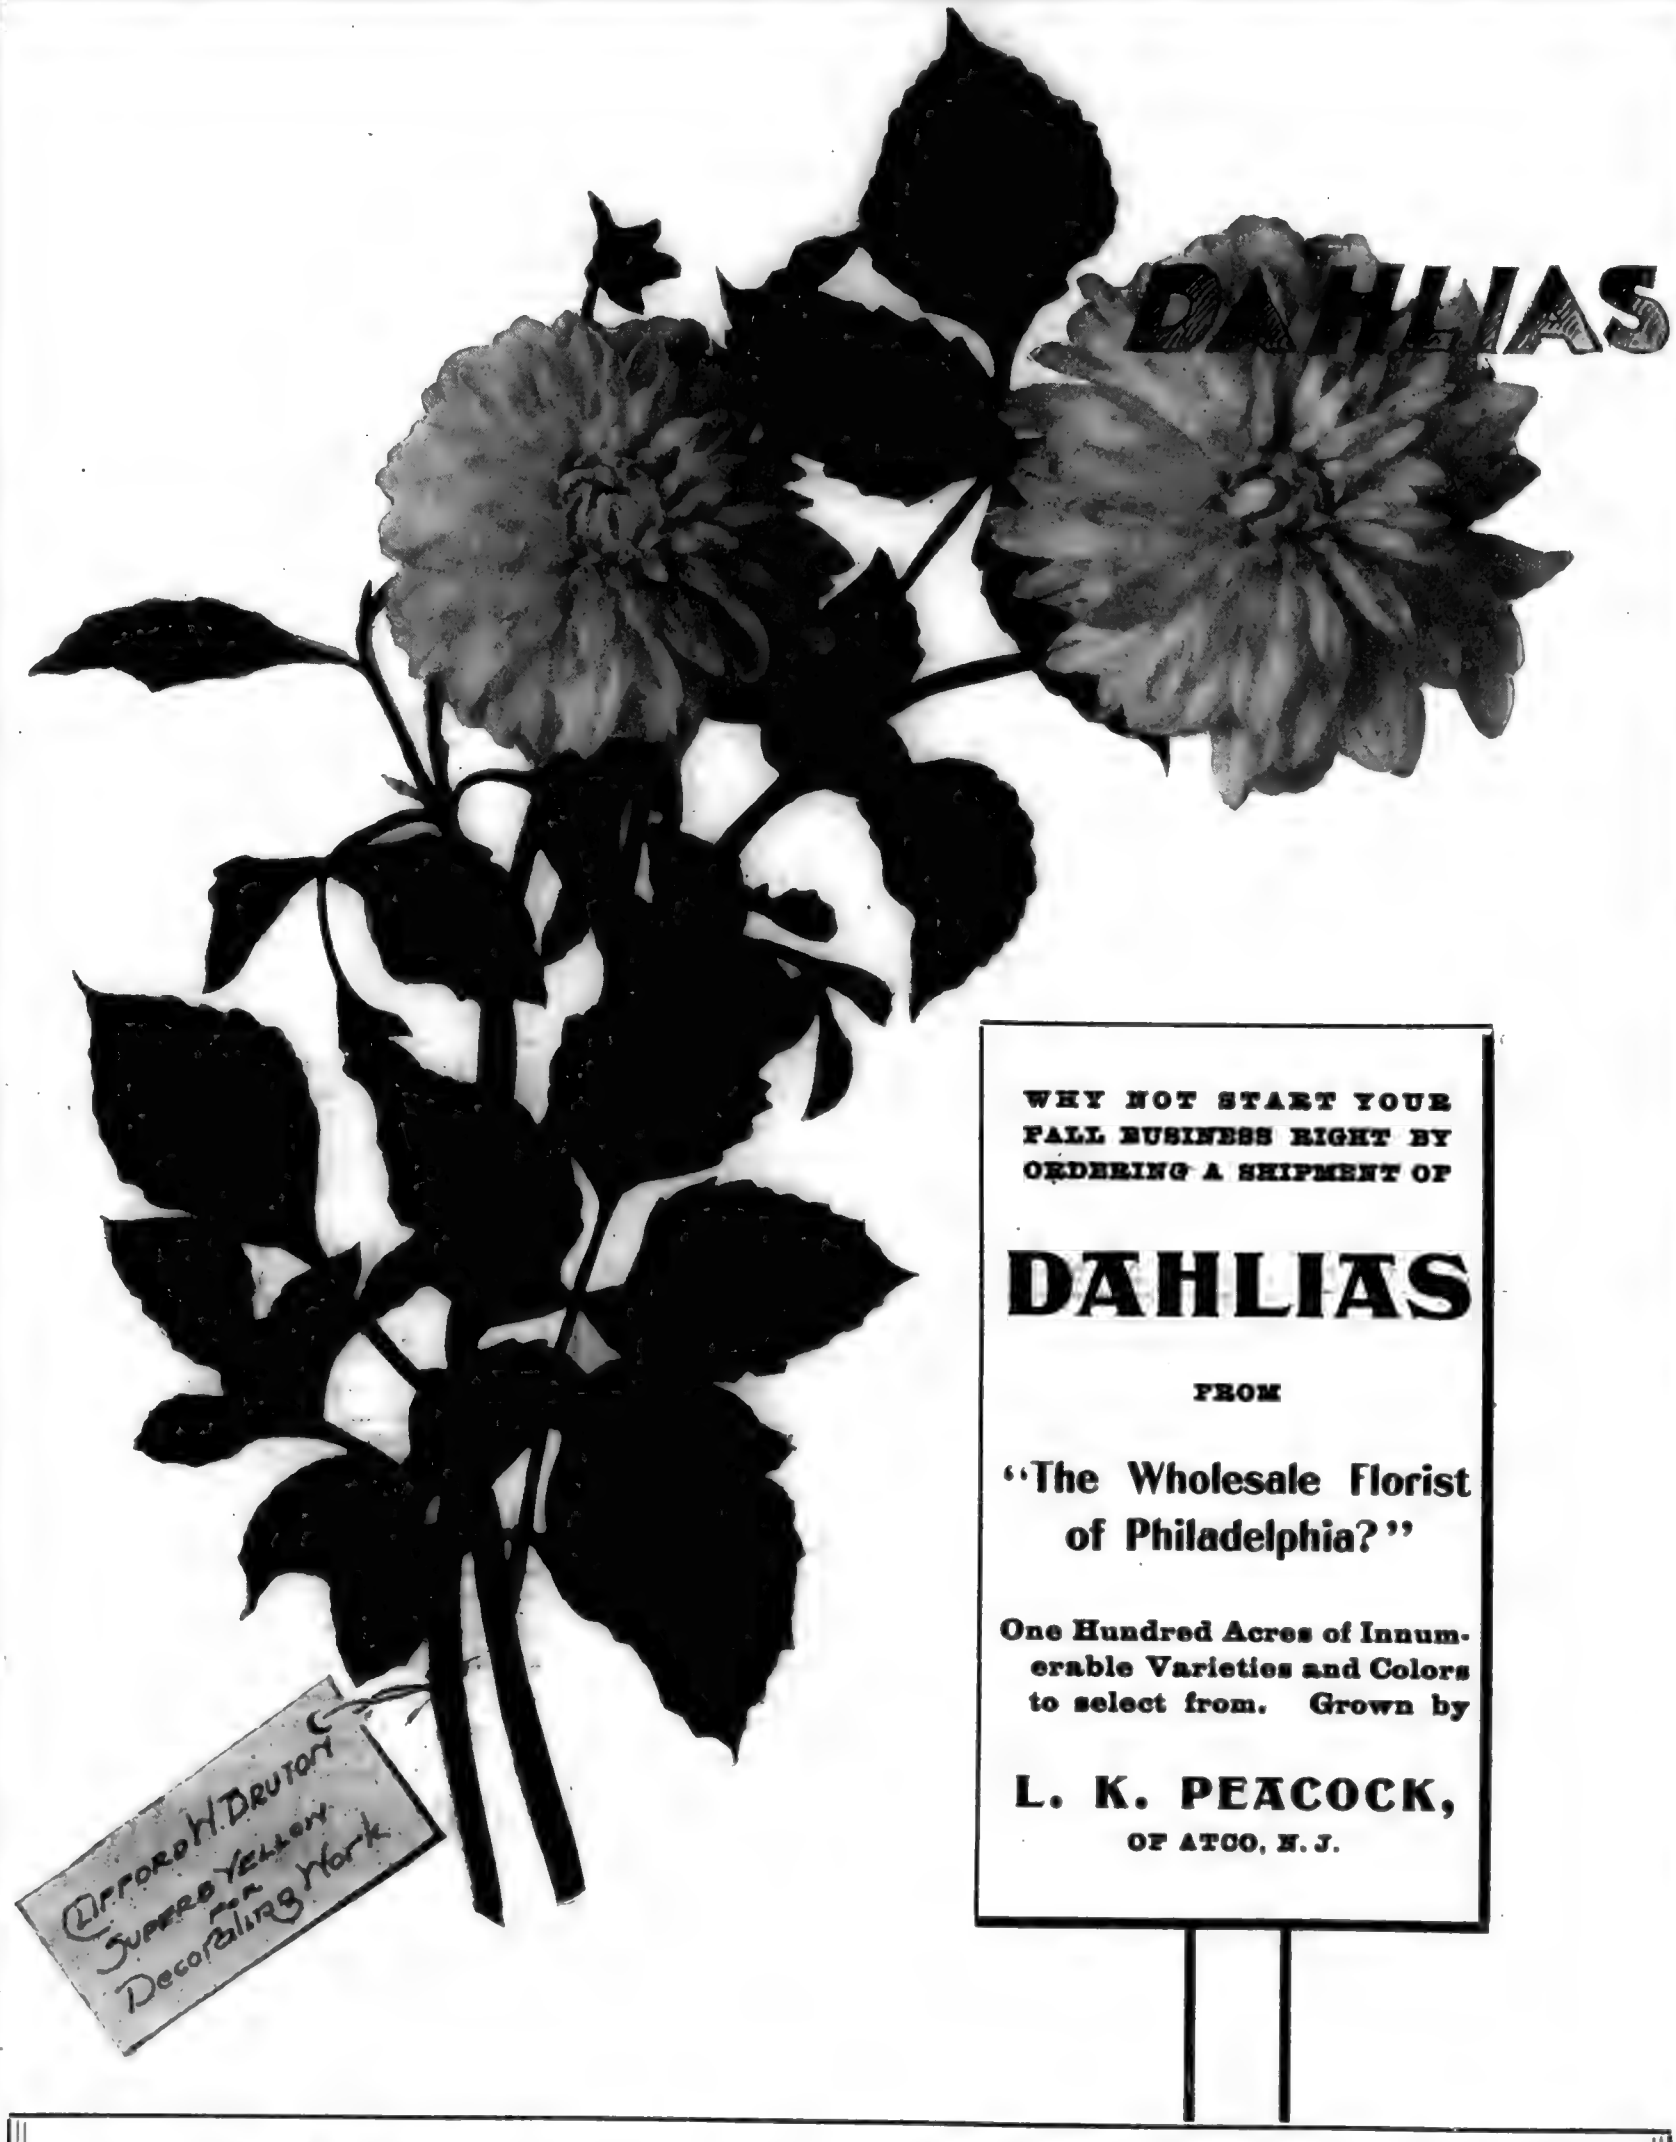
The Market.

Business is still in the summer rut, but now and then it hustles along at a more lively pace. This is due usually to funeral orders. There is plenty of stock of all seasonable kinds. Roses, especially Beauties, are in large supply. Kaiserin is very good and more of the better grades could be disposed of to advantage. Bride and Maid are still short-stemmed, but the quality is very fair. Meteor and Liberty are in fair supply, but the quality of the stock is not very good.

Carnations are still scarce, but it will not be long till there will be enough for all needs. Asters are in large supply and the quality of most of them is good. Not many go to waste. Gladioli are not so plentiful and the price is being held stiff. Dahlias sell fairly well, some varieties bringing a very good price. There is plenty of all kinds of green goods.

Various Notes.

R. Witterstaetter has completed planting and now is contemplating a visit to the World's Fair.



It is rumored that W. K. Partridge is to open a first-class store on Fourth street, between Walnut and Main, for retailing the flowers grown at his plant at Lockland. C. J. OHMER.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business continues quiet, with too much stock of nearly everything. Outdoor white carnations and Maman Cochet roses are wasting in large quantities. Good asters sell fairly well and are now in better supply. Inferior grades are hard to dispose of. Tuberoses are coming in more freely, but are not wanted by the stores; they therefore find their way to the street men at $1 per 100. The street men are also beginning to move the surplus of roses, but at extremely low prices. Dahlias are of good quality, but they, too, do not move very well as yet. The theater season opens in full this week, which may help business some. The stores will now begin to keep open later. Business must surely begin to pick up in the next few weeks. The Florists' Exchange reports that sales have been better than last summer by twenty per cent. The great waste seems to be overproduction in summer stock. A. F.

CLIFTON, N. J.—Robert Simpson is giving a trial to the new rose, Uncle John, sent out by Peter Reinberg, Chicago, having received 1,000 plants some time ago.

ROSE GROWING.

There is no reason why California should not supply a large percentage of the hundreds of thousands of roses that are planted, both under glass and out doors. We have the advantage of a long growing season; in fact, some varieties grow and bloom here all through the year. Our soil cannot be improved on to produce a good healthy growth and as we have several months of dry weather in the summer season the plants naturally become dormant, so that there is little if any pruning required to put them in shape for replanting in the greenhouse and keeping them in cellars until they can be planted in the open ground in the early spring. I have imported many varieties during the past thirty years, both from the eastern states and Europe, and I have invariably found that the three and four-year-old stock is inferior both in size and growth to that raised here in a single season. I refer to grafted plants as well as to those grown on their own roots. I looked over a few acres of budded stock this week and noted the height of some of our best selling sorts. American Beauty, one-year buds averaged thirty to thirty-six inches in height, Ulrich Brunner, thirty-six to forty-eight inches; Bridesmaid, twenty to twenty-four inches; Bride, twenty to twenty-four inches; Kaiserin, twenty-four to thirty inches; Testout, twenty-four to thirty inches; Carnot, thirty inches, and Gloire Lyonnaise, forty-eight inches. A. Richardson, Crimson Rambler, Reine Marie Henriette, Gloire de Dijon, Climbing Devoniensis and Rene d'Or, the average height was from five to seven feet for a year's growth, with heavy stem and plenty of roots to match.

This I consider about as large as it is advisable or profitable to handle under any consideration and yet that is the usual size we grow roses in California and, keep in mind, entirely without irrigation. We give them plenty of cultivation throughout the summer and by the middle of September they have reached the sizes I have just given and they are dormant enough to handle without danger.

I have written especially thus far of budded stock and will now devote a few words to roses grown on their own roots. All the big rose growers in California prefer stock that is budded low down on a suitable wild variety. When it is impossible to procure these, roses on their own roots have to fill the bill. For garden planting strong growing kinds are as satisfactory one way as another, but they are not usually the varieties that are used for forcing and I have yet to find a grower who does not prefer low budded stock that has been grown in the nursery to anything that may be coaxed along from one size of pot to another.

I have digressed somewhat from my subject regarding the comparison between California grown roses and those from other localities, but the fact remains that we are able to produce bigger, heavier plants entirely without irrigation in one-third of the time it takes to mature them anywhere else. The advantage in growing roses without artificial watering is that they make heavier branches and more small roots than they do when they are irrigated. In addition, there is no difficulty in drying them off just before digging, generally done here in September, when they are destined for the forcing house, and plants so grown when transplanted into beds in the greenhouse and given plenty of moisture break out immediately and in a few weeks are a mass of young shoots.

Roses easily exhaust the soil and I do not find it advisable to grow them longer than two years on the same piece of land. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Business has not improved during the past week and some of the florists attribute the trade stagnation to the fact that the city is all on the qui vive for the coming Knights Templar celebration. Whether that be the reason or not I do not know, but certainly the public is not patronizing the stores to any great extent. Flowers, especially asters, are in tremendous supply and they do not move very readily. The bulk of them go to the street venders and the price is away down. The basket men sell a bunch containing a dozen good asters, dahlias or carnations made up with plenty of wild fern for 10 cents, so it is easy to see how the market goes. Some of the stores have put up signs on the windows calling attention to the fact that they have greatly reduced the prices of flowers. This in my judgment is very poor policy, for the few extra cents they take in do not pay for the loss of prestige they suffer with the good people. It may be all right to try to cater to the 10-cent trade, but there is no chance of ever making any money out of such a proposition, as I have found that the class of people who are looking for cheap flowers always patronize the peddlers and only go to the stores when the basket venders are not in their accustomed places.

Roses are scarce and if the stock was better, they would bring more money. All the Beauties I have seen within the past week are poor in flower and color, although the stems and foliage are good. Some few good Brides and Maids are offered. Kaiserin is the best white in market at present and they bring about 50 cents per dozen to the growers. I have visited several of the large growers of roses in this vicinity during the past week and the chances for good stock are very slim for some time to come.

A few good yellow mums are shown in the windows around town. They are selling wholesale at $1.50 to $2.50 per dozen. The public have not seen enough of them yet, however, to make any great demand. It will be several weeks before the outside flowers are offered in quantity. G.

Altoona, Pa.—Chas. W. Eifler has had remarkable success with cauliflower this season.

New Orleans.—Wm. Rehm recently secured the corner at Napoleon and St. Charles avenues and will shortly erect a modern store and show house there. His trip to the St. Louis convention was partly for the purpose of getting ideas as to the best methods of construction.

Pontiac, Ill.—W. J. Miller & Son have about completed a lean-to violet house 6x110 and have laid a cement floor in the packing and work room. They have just benched 4,000 carnations. Roses and chrysanthemums look good. Everything points to good business this fall and winter.

The Market.

There has been a slight revival in business this week but there is still much to be desired. Asters continue to weigh down the market although receipts are not quite so heavy as they were. The growers have found that the poor grades hardly bring express charges if, indeed, they are sold at all, and some of them have, therefore, stopped shipping anything except their very best stock. But even this makes a great variety of material and the waste is still large, though as high as $1.50 to $2.00 is paid for some of the best stock; however, $1.00 per hundred buys good asters and in quantity the buyer makes his own price.

There are enough Beauties for all; in fact, prices are a little weak. Good Brides are in active demand for shipping and Maids hardly less so, the average receipts not being up to the quality required. Kaiserin is good property. Liberty is abundant and Chatenay in oversupply. Indoor carnations are not long enough to fetch a price and the outdoor stock is pretty badly used up, so that it is a problem to get stock which will be acceptable to out-of-town customers.

The gladioli do not pile up so badly as a week ago, but are yet abundant. Hydrangeas are offered at low prices. A few sweet peas are still seen. There are plenty of greens. Talk of ferns is that larger quantities than ever will go into cold storage this fall. It is said the Hinsdale people have raised their prices as compared to last year.

Various Notes.

The manufacturers of greenhouse building material all report business for the year as exceeding their expectations. They are still very busy and orders are coming in at a lively rate. Most of the building has been by outside growers, the bulk of local building coming from the vegetable growers north of town.

Wm. Fluegge, Jr., a brother of Fluegge Bros., who have succeeded Wm. Fluegge, Sr., on Lawrence avenue, built a nice range of glass at Morton Grove last season and now has his place in fine shape, growing carnations. He ships his cut to A. L. Randall Co. and his brothers ship to E. C. Amling.

John Mangel has had a nice showing in his window the past week, using Hunt's birch bark baskets in medium sizes, filled with fine, long-stemmed Shasta daisies, with a pale yellow ribbon tied on the handle. They are effective for many purposes.

J. A. Budlong reached Providence, R. I., safely on his annual bicycle trip to visit relatives there.

C. M. Dickinson is expected home from Mt. Clemens in a few days but is not yet wholly freed from rheumatism.

P. J. Hauswirth goes to St. Joe, Mo., tomorrow to attend the annual national meeting of the Red Men.

Peter Reinberg, John Muno, B. F. Weber and Matt Evert have returned from a week's good shooting at Morgan, Minn.

Frank Garland states that he has canceled all of his Dutch bulb orders and will try to live down the name of Little Holland, given his place at Des Plaines because of the number of bulbs forced there in recent years. One season he forced over 300,000 and sales aggregated $5,800, which was little enough, and the last year or two there has been no profit worth mentioning. He now has a big house of mums for which a follow crop will have to be found and intends to try violets. He will still grow Easter lilies and a few French bulbs.

C. E. Morton is expected home from Europe in a few days. His deal with John H. Holden, for the purchase of his Forty-seventh street store, which was all arranged last spring, has not yet been consummated.

Mons Olson, of J. A. Budlong's, is at Kansas City for a few days.

A. L. Randall is now shipping the peach crop from his farm in Michigan, but it isn't a big one, orchards near the lake having suffered badly last winter.

E. F. Winterson Co. is getting in a few baskets of pansies but they sell slowly at $2.00 per 100 bunches.

Weiland & Risch have about 5,000 single-stemmed chrysanthemum plants which have made a wonderful growth.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. are rushing building operations on their new glass.

Last year we had frost September 10.

The Market.

The retailers seem glad that August is past and are expecting better business in September, with the returning of city people, and improvement in stock will make increased sale. However, I believe from some things I have heard that this August was as good as any other August.

Various Notes.

Ollie Beet, manager of L. I. Neff's east end store, has gone to California with the Knights Templar.

The Knights of Pythias dedicated their farm and home one day last week and E. C. Ludwig contributed the stock to plant an orchard. As Ernest never does anything by halves, some nurseryman is going to get a good order.

B. L. Elliott, the rose and carnation grower of Cheswick, and his wife, will spend a few weeks on the briny deep. Ben has been making inquiry as to the best thing to anchor your stomach with.

All growers in this section report planting all done and had good weather to do it in. They are now only waiting for winter to harvest their shekels.

We have just heard of a florist who has moved into a store formerly occupied by a real estate man. The sign over the door read: "Pay little and buy lots." He says it is a good sign and has left it up.

J. J. Zimmerman, formerly at L. I. Neff's Braddock store, has opened a new store on Mt. Washington.

W. B. Ague, who runs the big flower stand in the Liberty Market, has just returned from Atlantic City.

Randolph & McClements, in order to make room for their always increasing trade, are going up in the air this time by adding another story to their store, also putting down a cement walk around their property.

The boys at the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. were buried in asters last week. A heavy demand would have been necessary to clean up this stock.

Paul M. Pierson, of Scarborough, was one of the visitors last week.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., stopped in this city on his way from St. Louis.

Ed. Reid, of Philadelphia, stopped here on his way west.

Will Flemm, of Breitenstein & Flemm, is away on his vacation. HOO-HOO.

ROCKY FORD muskmelon seed from all reports is likely to be plentiful the coming season.

No improvement over last week in the condition of wax podded beans is shown by this week's reports.

THERE seems to be no uneasiness at eastern points as to any serious shortage in green podded beans.

THE early varieties of sweet corn are reported safe from frost, and a fairly good harvest is expected.

THE dwarf varieties of wrinkled peas are about as short as usual at this time and the prices are going up.

REPORTS to hand September 3 indicate that seed crops of sweet corn in Connecticut and New York are very late.

CUCUMBER and sweet corn crops are having suitable weather now and the outlook for a harvest is more favorable.

ONION set harvesting was completed at Chicago by September 10 last year; it will go beyond September 20 this year.

THE later harvest of onion sets at Chicago shows the stock to be quite inferior to that harvested early. This is always the case; a slow growth is not favorable to the onion set, and a late harvest always gives a large percentage of stiff necks.

VISITED CHICAGO:—Otto H. R. Weis, manager David Sachs, Quedlinburg, Germany; J. Comont, representing Jas. Carter, Dunnet & Beal, London, England; S. B. Dicks, representing Cooper, Taber & Co., London, England; E. V. Hallock, Queens, N. Y.

THE Archias Seed Store, Sedalia, Mo., not only makes a good display of seeds and implements at the state fair, but makes the agricultural exhibits a strong advertisement for them by offering a number of premiums for vegetables, etc., grown from their seeds.

HENRY FIELD, Shenandoah, Ia., says that for the season of 1904 his expenditure for newspaper advertising was a trifle over $1,000, and he received over 10,000 direct inquiries. Almost half of them proved to be buyers, and he made direct mail-order sales amounting to over $24,000. This was exclusive of any commission or wholesale business.

SOUTHERN SEED CROPS.

G. B. McVay, president of the Amzi Godden Co., Birmingham, Ala., on September 5 supplies the following report on seed crops that are grown in that section of the United States:

Watermelon is a fairly good crop and deliveries will not be short of seventy-five to ninety per cent.

Egg plant is a big crop and deliveries will be made in full.

White multiplying onions were a short crop and only about twenty-five per cent deliveries were made.

Winter top sets were also an exceedingly short crop and not over twenty-five per cent deliveries were made.

Okra is the principal seed crop grown in this section. The crop looks fine at the present time and unless a heavy frost visits us a full crop will be made, but it requires a full season for this crop, as the period of producing never ceases until about the middle of October. From present prospects we have every reason to believe that full delivery will be made on this item.

PURE SEEDS.

Is it not about time for the American Seed Trade Association, the postal authorities, or some other organization wielding authority, to undertake to put a stop to the fraudulent use of the mails by many of the so-called seedsmen? Farms have been ruined by obnoxious weeds contained in seed purchased from these parties. Many a farmer after taking exceptional pains to prepare his best ground for some supposedly fine grain advertised by such seedsman, discovers that the yield was not as good as he had been feeding his live stock. If the pure food law is doing any good for humanity, may not the same principles be applied to the seed business to benefit the farmers of our country and the good seedsmen?

FRANK B. WHITE.

ORANGE, N. J.

At the regular meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society, September 2, the topic of the organization for the gardeners was laid on the table upon motion of Jos. A. Manda. Mr. Manda told the society of his experiences at St. Louis and the ravages of the white aphis upon the maple trees of East Orange was discussed but no remedy suggested. The floral display was a representation of the season's flowers, the awards showing varying degrees of merit, and consisted of gladioli, dahlias, phloxes, delphiniums, asters and verbenas, to which the well-known names of Edward Thomas, Arthur Bodwell, D. Kindsgrab, Peter Duff, Wm. Read, W. J. Bennett, Malcolm MacRorie and John Hayes were appended.

Some fine sprays of Polygonum cuspidatum from the estate of Stuart Hartshorne, grown by Arthur Caparn, occupied the center of the main table. Mr. Caparn showed a well arranged vase of this with delphiniums. Peter Duff's large blooms of the white dahlia, Grand Duke Alexis, were much admired. The group of Cypripedium insigne hybrids from Henry Graves, Edward Thomas, gardener, and the collection of ferns, Scottii, Piersoni and Anna Foster, from William Barr, Arthur Bodwell, gardener, received high praise. Flowers not for competition consisting of gladioli from Stuart Hartshorne, A. Caparn, gardener; carnations from Mrs. H. A. Mandeville, M. MacRorie, gardener, and O. D. Munn, John Hayes, gardener, and asters and verbenas from J. B. Davis were suitably rewarded with the society's certificates.

The judges for the evening were Arthur Caparn, Jos. A. Manda and Edward Thomas.

SPACE UNDER BENCHES.

Indirectly I have fallen heir to a number of queries and topics too numerous to reply to, or open on, all at once, so I choose one of the laziest for the present. The subscriber asks: "What is the best disposition to make, in a greenhouse plant, of the room under the benches? Can bulbs, such as tulips, French hyacinths or Paper White narcissi be grown there to advantage?" I don't think that space beneath the benches should be considered wasted because you don't produce a crop there, any more than you should deplore the fact that there is a fine space wasted between the top of your plants on the bench and the glass. Yet there are a number of uses to which to put the space beneath the benches.

Some growers of bulbs put their flats there for a few days when first brought in from outside, but it is not a place to grow them. There would not be heat enough in mid-winter and in March and April, when little heat is needed, these bulbs would all grow weak, lanky, topple over and be largely useless. Bulbs, that is tulips, narcissi, etc., take up little room when you consider that a crop only occupies the bench from fifteen to twenty days. In April or about Easter, when greatly crowded, we often put flats of tulips and narcissi on the ground along the edge of a path and partly beneath the bench, but never before the flowers are about open. They get light there and are too far matured to be harmed.

Beneath a warm, dry bench we lay on their sides after New Year's our stock plants of poinsettia. Lemon verbenas, lantanas and stock fuchsias that have been grown in pots all summer will rest there if not allowed to get too dry, until January or February. Hydrangeas, after a light frost, are brought in and stood along the edge of the path or just beneath the bench in a cool house. Beneath a bench in a carnation house is a most excellent place for storing canna roots. While they are there you are not watering your carnations so copiously that there is enough drip to hurt the roots. We have often stood a few hundred pots of Astilbe Japonica beneath a bench until the foliage started.

Finally, many florists have no shed to store their pots in and, if boards are put down to keep the pots off the earth, under a bench is a good place during winter, but let me say that the man who leaves his pots beneath the bench during summer when there is no fire heat but copious drippings from the bench above, is a friend to the pot maker and an enemy to himself.

Many uses can occasionally and incidentally be made of the space beneath a bench, but I know of no crop that can be cultivated entirely in such a place, except it be Agaricus campestris, and the writer is far more expert at eating than at cultivating mushrooms.

CLASSIFICATION OF DAHLIAS.

At the last meeting of the Newport Horticultural Society a committee was chosen to make rules for the classification of dahlias for their September show. The following is their report:

The classification of dahlias shall be founded on the following rules and descriptions:

1. Cactus.—Rays or florets (petals) about twice as long as they are broad with edges rolled backwards for two-thirds of their length, with a tendency to curve upwards at tips, arrangement loose and free; the floret tips should be entire and not split or toothed, the colors solid or variegated. Involucre bracts narrow and having margins curled back.

Note. Fringed cactus flowers like the above but with tips notched or toothed admissable here.

Types, Lord Roberts and Mrs. Charles Turner; for fringed cactus, Captain Broad.

2. Decorative or Hybrid Cactus.—Rays almost as broad as long, flat or with edges turned upwards, tip with tendency to reflex.

Types, Oban, Nymphaea, Catherine Duer.

3. Show.—Size medium to very large, rays cupped. Colors solid or variegated, with edges or tips darker than the ground color.

Types, Storm King and A. D. Livoni.

4. Fancy.—Similar to the show, but having ground color darker than edge or tip.

Types, Admiral Schley, Frank Smith.

5. Pompon or Bouquet.—Size one to two inches in diameter. Rays cupped as in show and fancy. Colors solid or variegated.

6. Tom Thumb.—Plants very dwarf. Flowers two to three inches in diameter; colors various.

7. Single.—Rays or florets, eight preferred and not recurved at margins; colors solid or variegated.

8. Single Cactus.—Florets long and narrow with edges rolled backwards as in the double cactus, sometimes twisted at the tip, eight florets preferred.

9. Collarette.—Single, with a row of petaloid stamens in the ray of florets.

10. Single Decorative or Hybrid Cactus.—Flowers with single series of rays, preferably eight, which conform in their characteristics to those of the double decorative or hybrid cactus class.

Types, Twentieth Century and Pink Century.

11. Single Tom Thumb.—Plants very dwarf; flowers two to three inches in diameter, colors various.

FINAL RESOLUTIONS.

The following is the report of the committee on final resolutions at the St. Louis convention of the S. A. F., which have heretofore escaped publication:

Whereas, The citizens, and especially the members of the St. Louis Florists' Club, have extended to the Society of American Florists a hearty welcome, and have done everything for our pleasure and comfort and have made our stay in their beautiful city an occasion long to be remembered,

Resolved, That we tender to Hon. Cyrus P. Walbridge our sincere thanks for his hearty and kindly words of welcome.

Resolved, That the thanks of this society be extended to the members of the St. Louis Florists' Club for their untiring efforts in our behalf, and the advancement of our work.

Resolved, That our thanks are especially due to President J. J. Beneke, and to his able assistants who were chairmen of his various committees and did their work so efficiently and cheerfully.

Resolved, That the thanks of this society be tendered to Mr. Charles A. Kuehn, who made our exhibition the great success that marked it.

Resolved, That our thanks are due to Miss Perle Fulmer for her entertaining selection of vocal music, and to the others who assisted in making the president's reception a pleasant and memorable one.

Resolved, That our thanks are due to the able and interesting essayists, and also to the horticultural visitors from abroad whose addresses were so much appreciated. And to the ladies of St. Louis who managed the entertainment in connection with the trolley ride, we express our grateful appreciation.

Resolved, That we acknowledge with thanks the cordial invitation of the Lewis Publishing Company to visit their place and partake of their hospitality, and of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company for similar courtesies extended.

Resolved, That we are especially grateful to Director William Trelease and the trustees of the Missouri Botanic Gardens for their generosity and hospitable reception so kindly tendered the Society of American Florists.

Signed: G. L. GRANT,
J. L. DILLON,
J. F. SULLIVAN,
Committee.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held August 30, President Ballantyne in the chair. Angus Ross, Ossining; H. Shave, Tarrytown, and A. Golding, Irvington, were elected active members. J. G. Raw, E. Lundberg and Hamilton Scott were proposed for membership.

The following prominent horticulturists were invited to act as judges at the November exhibition. John Ash, Pomfret, Conn.; Mr. Jenkins, Lenox, Mass.; Wm. Hastings, Tuxedo; D. Frazer, Pittsburg; C. H. Totty, Madison, N. J., and John Scott, Brooklyn.

After the business was dispatched, the entertainment committee, Wm. Scott and J. W. Smith, were called upon to do their duty in the way of serving refreshments, and for the rest of the evening the members had a most enjoyable time, singing songs, telling stories and discussing the summer outing to Rye Beach, which took place August 17. Over eighty-five members and friends sat down to dinner at the beach. The chief amusements were bowling and shooting, R. White carrying off first prize for being the best shot. The members present seemed to be all of the same mind, that they had a very good time. Prizes for dahlias are offered for the September meeting.

AMERICAN PEONY SOCIETY.

The following is the full text of the circular of the American Peony Society, briefly referred to in last week's REVIEW:

The American Peony Society at its last meeting in New York agreed to co-operate with the Horticultural Department of Cornell University for the purpose of making a study of all varieties of peonies that it is possible to secure at the present time. This study is to extend over a sufficient period of years to enable the investigators to cover the following objects:

1. Nomenclature.—To bring order out of the confusion which now exists in the naming of varieties. This part of the study will establish correct names by applying rules of nomenclature and will furnish growers with accurate descriptions of all authentic varieties.

2. Botany.—To ascertain the botanical status of each variety. In other words, to refer it to the species from which it appears to have been derived.

3. Cultural.—Careful studies of varieties shall be made in order to determine the commercial values of the different kinds. Such points as vigor, health, floriferous qualities and colors shall be noted. It is also expected that fertilizer experiments designed to influence the size and shipping quality of the flowers shall be included.

The conditions governing the test are as follows:

1. The land, the labor of planting and all subsequent care are provided by the Experiment Station. All notes are taken by the station according to a scheme arranged and co-operated in by the Committee on Nomenclature appointed by the American Peony Society.

2. Plants.—The plants are to be furnished, free of cost, by the American Peony Society, members thereof, or interested growers of peonies. Three plants of each variety shall constitute a test, but the donors may send one or two if more are not available.

3. Final Disposition of the Plants.—At the close of the test, in perhaps four or five years, Cornell University Experiment Station shall be entitled to a complete set of two plants each of all distinct varieties. Each contributor of plants to this test shall be entitled to as many plants of distinct varieties as he originally contributed, provided they are available after the Experiment Station set has been made up. The remaining plants shall become the property of the American Peony Society.

4. Publicity.—The results of the study shall be published in bulletin form by the Experiment Station. All members of the American Peony Society shall be entitled to a copy of each publication, and 100 copies of each shall be deposited with the secretary of the American Peony Society for the use of members of this organization.

Those who intend aiding in this important co-operative experiment should send their collections to the Horticultural Department, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., about September 15. Plants should be carefully packed, labelled and accompanied by a list of varieties with number of plants of each kind forwarded. It would be well in forwarding the plants to notify Secretary Fewkes as well as the chairman of the committee on Nomenclature.

The committee in charge consists of John Craig, Horticultural Department Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., chairman; C. J. Malloy (Ellwanger & Barry), Rochester, N. Y.; John A. Charlton, Rochester, N. Y.; J. F. Rosenfield, West Point, Neb.; A. H. Fewkes, secretary American Peony Society, Newton Highlands, Mass.

AMERICAN CARNATION SOCIETY.

A meeting of the board of directors was held in the Exposition building, St. Louis, August 18. President James Hartshorne presided.

The first order of business was the adoption of the premium list. After considerable discussion the list was adopted as per last year's schedule, excepting the display of single blooms, which was eliminated, all agreeing that it did not add to the appearance of the show and was of no educational value.

An offer by H. Weber & Sons, Oakland, Md., of cash prizes for Genevieve Lord, Gov. Lowndes and Norway was received and accepted. The president, secretary and all members of the society were recommended to solicit special premiums and forward particulars to the secretary as soon as practical and not later than October 1.

It was unanimously approved that the premium list be printed and mailed on or about November 1, that it be printed complete, advertisements included, and a second copy mailed on or about January 1, 1905, so that advertisers receive a double circulation and the members be kept reminded of the valuable premiums offered.

Papers offered by President Hartshorne, and approved by the board, are as follows: "Carnation Diseases," by Prof. Hasselbring, of the University of Chicago, Chicago; "Carnations From a Retailer's Point of View," by Geo. Weinhoeber, of Chicago, this paper to be illustrated with the practical demonstration of effects possible with carnations; "Exhibition Carnations," by Fred Lemon, Richmond, Ind., illustrating methods of cutting, packing and staging; "Cutting, Packing and Shipping Carnations for Long and Short Distance Shipments," illustrated by practical demonstration, by C. L. Washburn, Chicago.

President Hartshorne advised the board that the sixth floor of the Auditorium Hotel had been secured as an exhibition and meeting room. It is a large, finely arranged hall with mosaic floor, admitting of the application of moisture to help keep the atmosphere in good shape for the flowers. It is well ventilated and almost ideal for the showing and keeping of carnations. Meeting rooms are at the end of the hall on the same floor. He added that there is every reason to look for this as the banner meeting of the society and recommended that every member make his arrangements to come and bring a few new members.

There being no further business before the meeting, it was declared adjourned to meet in Chicago the last Wednesday of January, 1905.

ALBERT M. HERR, Sec'y.

LENOX, MASS.—The contract for the new greenhouses to be built at Greenville Winthrop's country place has been awarded to the Pierson-Sefton Co., of Jersey City.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

FALL planting is to be preferred for all hardy roses.

WE should be glad to hear from anyone who has found an effective method of combatting black spot on roses.

THE Golden Glow rudbeckia has been so largely planted in the last few years that many nurserymen now find the call for it declining.

THE wholesale demand for peonies is reported considerably less than last season, with retail business showing a nice increase, both east and west.

MANY nurserymen now make their most determined effort for orders for fall planting, feeling that routine methods will bring all the business they can handle in the brief spring season.

ROBERT H. BLAIR, a prominent nurseryman of Kansas City, died August 28 at the home of his nephew, George H. Johnson, 1004 Forest avenue, of a nervous trouble. Mr. Blair was one of the original owners of the Lee's Summit nurseries. He was 67 years ald and a native of Pennsylvania.

THE bulk of California deciduous fruits are grown in the Sacramento valley. Shipments from there to eastern markets to date have been 3,330 carloads, including pears 1,400 cars, plums 990, peaches 475, cherries 209. The total is considerably less than last year, there being a heavy falling off in peach shipments.

PIPING AND PUMP.

Will a fifty horse-power steam boiler be sufficient to maintain a night temperature of 50 to 55 degrees in zero weather in three houses 22x150? The houses are twelve feet from floor level to ridge, both gables exposed, three feet wood and the balance glass. The east wall adjoins other greenhouses, but the west wall is exposed, with four feet wood and three feet glass. The houses are connected. The intention is to carry 1½-inch pipes overhead for flows and return in 1¼-inch pipes along the sides of the solid tile beds. How many of these pipes will be required to maintain the above temperature? If the boiler is placed on the level of the greenhouse floor will a steam trap answer to return the water to the boiler or would a steam pump be necessary?

H. L. J.

A fifty horse-power boiler, having proper draught, will carry at least three more such houses. The west house will require fifteen lines of 1¼-inch pipe as returns and three lines of 1½-inch pipes for flows. Each of the other houses will require two flow and eleven return pipes. It would be more satisfactory, however, to use one 3-inch flow pipe in each house instead of two and three lines of 1½-inch.

If the water lever of boiler can be placed at least eight inches below the lowest point in the return pipes, the water can be returned to boiler without either trap or steam pump. If the boiler must be set so that the water level is above the return pipes, the water can be returned to the boiler by means of an automatic steam trap. The working of this trap will require the maintenance of a steam pressure of eight or ten pounds. L. C. C.

TESTIMONIAL.

BUFFALO, N. Y., April 21, 1904.
Messrs. BAUR & SMITH, Indianapolis, Ind.

GENTLEMEN: — The dozen plants of Indianapolis Carnation sent to me for trial last Summer received unfortunately poor care and were starved in three-inch pots till the end of August, when they were put on the bench. They quickly recovered and by Christmas gave us some splendid flowers. I consider its habit perfect. It is all flowers and a splendid stem. There surely will be a widespread demand for this fine pink variety.

Very truly yours,
WILLIAM SCOTT.

New Plants.

Introducers of new plants of any class during the season of 1904 are invited to send lists thereof to this office that credit may be given and due record made in the annual report for the year, now in preparation.

Department of Plant Registration.

Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, submits for registration new sweet peas, as follows: Bridesmaid, a selection from Katherine Tracy, exactly like it except in color, which is a bright, deep pink; Flora Morton, very bright blue, quite different from Countess of Radnor and kindred varieties, being a brighter blue and clearer color; Evening Star, pale buff, flushed with salmon pink, an open form of Venus; Nymphæa, pink and white flowers on the same stalk, usually four flowers to a stem; Speckled Beauty, primrose, with a heavy dusting of pink all over the flower; Sunrise, bright pink suffused with primrose, a new color in sweet peas; Sunset, primrose, heavily striped with bright rose; Mrs. George Higginson, Jr., delicate light blue, showing practically no tint of mauve; Florence Fraser, an improved Blanche Ferry, height six to seven feet, stems twelve to fourteen inches long, very stout, strong grower and free, early bloomer.

Wm. J. Stewart, Sec'y.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Market.

Our florists had a busy August. Roses are selling well, especially American Beauties, which seem every season to grow more in favor. Kaiserins were very good the past few days and in short supply. Liberties are about used up for the present. Gardenias have been in such favor this summer that the supply is all but gone, and they sell on the avenue as high as $9 a dozen for the best. Outdoor stuff is in large supply, but there is only a market for the very best of it; in fact, there is no use trying to sell anything but the very best in this market. Some beautiful gladioli are seen. The favorite decorative dahlia of Newport is Catherine Duer, a most gorgeous crimson red, and everyone wants it for dinner decorations; good flowers sell readily for $3 a dozen. This week the horse show and next week the dog show will keep things going.

Various Notes.

Stewart Ritchie has had a very busy and good season; besides all his bedding stuff which was even more than usual, he has carried on a very large vegetable garden.

Thomas Galvin tells us that he sold entirely out of geraniums, and as he grew something over 20,000 he has reason to feel pleased. At wholesale they brought $8 per hundred. ZERO.

DAVENPORT, IA.—Littig Bros. are in a predicament. Two parties claim title to the building in which their store is located and each demands the rent. They are withholding payment until the courts decide to whom they shall pay.

GERANIUMS....

We offer a fine lot of rooted cuttings of all the best new and standard sorts, ready for delivery about the latter part of September. Strong, well rooted stock, well worth all we ask for it.

E. H. TREGO—The new scarlet, very fine. L. FRANCAIS—Dbl. salmon, an improved Beaute Poitevine. CHAUTEMARLE—The best of all the single salmons. FLEUR DE ROSE—An improved J. Viaud. J. MADELINE—New dbl. light pink. FIANCEE—Fine new dbl. white. KLEBER—Dbl. purple, the best of its color.

$2.00 per 100; $18.00 per 1000.

Also the following well known standard sorts: Heteranthe, De Beaumetz, Bellerophon, Mrs. J. M. Gaar, Mme. Noizet, Castellane, Thos. Meehan, Mme. Landry, Le Maitre, La Fraicheur, J. Viaud, Canovars, Champ de Niege (double white). $1.50 per 100; $12.00 per 1000.

Send a trial order and convince yourself of the superior quality of our stock. Terms—Cash with order, or C. O. D. if purchaser will pay collecting charges.

OCEANIC, N. J.

A very well attended meeting of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society took place September 2. The main business was the discussion of the show to be held November 1 and 2, which promises to be one of the best ever held by this society. The secretary announced several donations as cash prizes. Geo. Hale showed a fine collection of dahlias, twenty-five varieties of show and fancy, for which he received 90 points, and twenty-seven varieties of cactus, for which he got 95. Two light buff seedlings scored 80 points and one shell-pink scored 85. Wm. Turner showed some peaches, Thomas Rivers, grown under glass. This peach is unsurpassed in size, shape and color, and measures ten and three-quarters inches in circumference, but we can say nothing as to its flavor, as our judging did not go that far. The judges of the evening were James Dowlen, W. Kennedy and N. Butterbach. B.

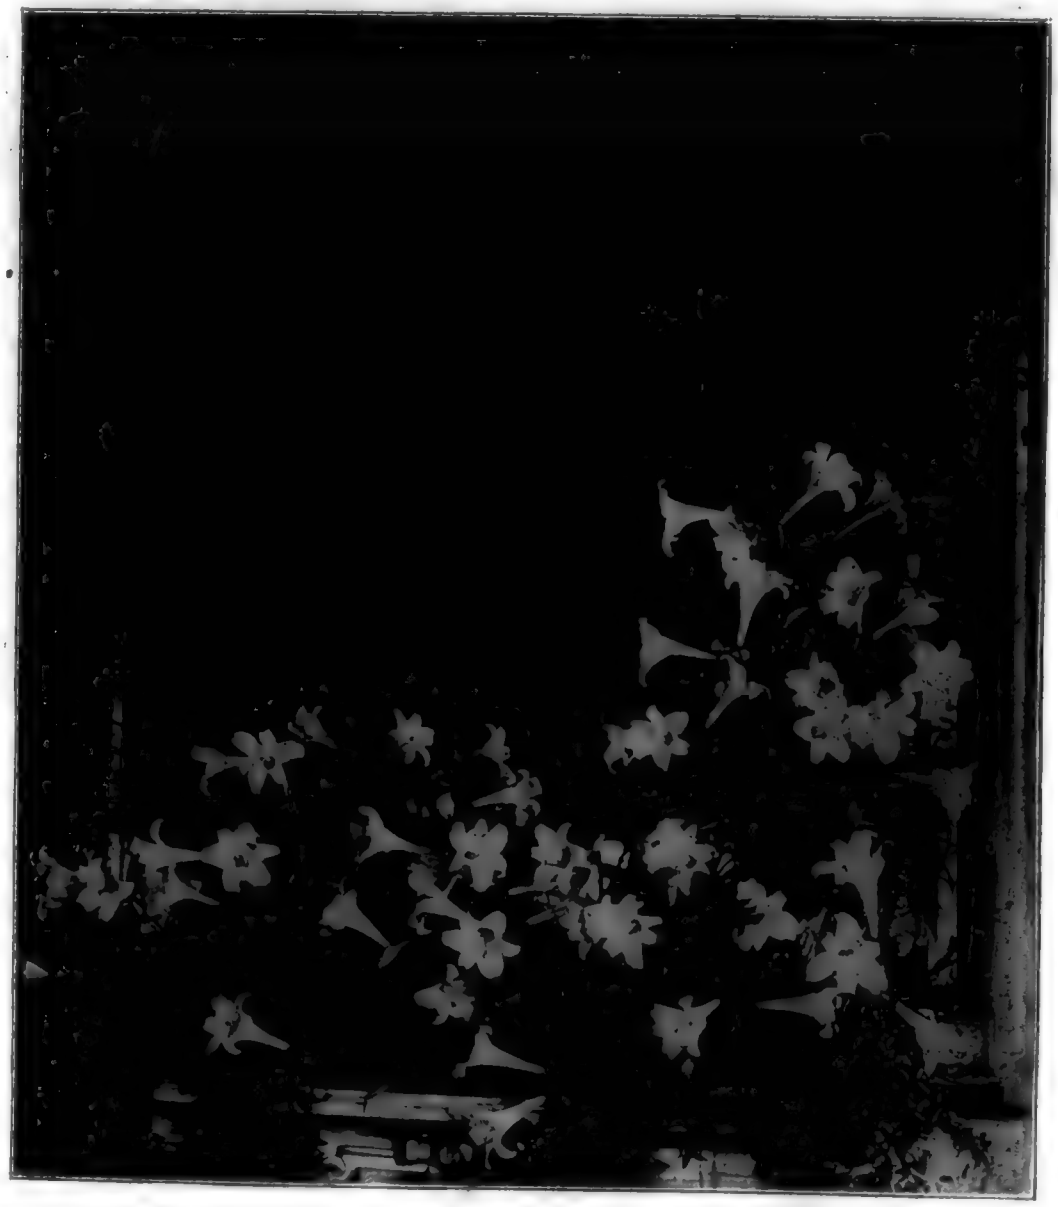
BEGINNINGS IN DESIGN...

DECORATIVE SCHEMES.

Mirror Decorations.

Important among floral designs, according to a definition given in a recent article, are the single features of a room decoration. Each one, or the whole and its parts, should be as truly a design as a pillow or a harp, although there should be some difference as to the positive nature of the design.



First, having selected the architectural feature which you wish to embellish, make up your mind how you want it to look when finished; second, determine how to accomplish it. In other words, get the design first and then consider the mechanical execution. If the design satisfies you, even if the execution seems difficult, invent a way to sustain or hold the design as you see it first in your mind's eye.

After all that is said these days as to looseness and naturalness of arrangement, there must be a certain amount of symmetry and unity in every correct decoration. While the outlines of no two petals on the same flower, or on different flowers of the same variety, or the leaflets on the same leaf, or two leaves on the same plant will exactly coincide if one is placed over the other, there is the same general formation observed in both, and a uniformity in general but never in detail. It should be just so in regard to the units or ornament which we manufacture. Make each one a symmetrical unit, but not slavishly so in every detail. I do not know of a better synonym for symmetry in this connection than the term "balance." Let every product have a certain regular appearance to its outline. It is almost permissible to carry this a little farther into the mathematical realm, and say let the outline of a single decorative scheme take the form of a geometrical figure.

In a good window or mirror decoration the approximately regular appearance can be traced easily. In order to illustrate this plainly, take the ordinary form of decoration for a tall, narrow mirror. It has a large, triangular arrangement of plants or cut flowers at the base, and a balancing upper triangle formed of light material, like smilax or Asparagus Sprengeri. These two triangles have a position natural to themselves. If the lower scheme were reversed and that part of the decoration placed on the same side of the mirror as the upper part, the effect would be gaping and awkward.

The same principle of design form may be easily traced in the illustration, the same triangle scheme. As can be readily seen, this also is a mirror decoration.

There should always be some sort of connection between the lines of a decorative scheme, either accomplished or suggested. In this illustration the sprays of smilax from the top appear to be stretching toward the lily stalks. In a few cases they have reached them, but oftener they have failed, and still a larger number have become entangled with each other and their tips have been turned to one side or the other, and on the left side of the mirror frame they are caught in a garland which falls to the base on the left and is thickened by the addition of heavier strings and festooned along the whole front of the mantel shelf and the grate. The drapery scheme almost encircles the lily banking. At the point where the drapery seems to weaken, we have made the strongest point and heaviest part of the lily grouping, thus preserving the balance. Avoiding any abrupt corners, extending several feet from the upper left point of the mirror frame, there was a tapering garland of smilax following the molding and straggling over a picture frame.

A Mirror Decoration of Lilies and Smilax.

This illustration was a part of a December wedding decoration, made as follows: The upper part was of separated smilax fastened in clusters on the back part of the top only. From six to a dozen strings were tied together at the heavy end. Enough of the tie wire was left to wrap around a double-pointed tack which was thus made to serve the purpose of half a dozen tacks and also to serve a good principle in art, namely, to start as many lines from a common source as possible.

For the banking of the mantel with lilies, we used a galvanized pan six inches deep and long enough to about cover the average mantel. It is watertight, painted a dark olive-green on the outside, and filled solidly with sphagnum. The sphagnum was also filled in in places three or four inches above the top of the pan. This filling in irregularly was no accident. It is not desirable to have a bank so that flowers will form a straight line across the mantel. If the flowers happen to be all of about the same length stem, make hills and hollows in your sphagnum filling and thus break the outline of the flower groups. Lay wood ferns over the top of the sphagnum and along the outside edges of the pan, allowing them to droop outward sufficiently to hide the pan. It is not often necessary to wrap the sphagnum in a mantel pan. If, however, the moss is banked up high enough to need it, wrap over the moss and around the pan with hemp twine, much as is done with wire frames. If an extra long mantel is to be decorated, and you desire to use your average size pan, piece out at each end with a fern plant or a flat basket filled with fern leaves stemmed and set in sphagnum. If the mantel is too deep, pull the pan to the front and spread out foliage from the pan backwards. Fifty lilies

At the point where the drapery seems to weaken, we have made the strongest point and heaviest part of the lily grouping, thus preserving the balance. Avoiding any abrupt corners, extending several feet from the upper left point of the mirror frame, there was a tapering garland of smilax following the molding and straggling over a picture frame.

A Mirror Decoration of Lilies and Smilax.

This illustration was a part of a December wedding decoration, made as follows: The upper part was of separated smilax fastened in clusters on the back part of the top only. From six to a dozen strings were tied together at the heavy end. Enough of the tie wire was left to wrap around a double-pointed tack which was thus made to serve the purpose of half a dozen tacks and also to serve a good principle in art, namely, to start as many lines from a common source as possible.

It is not often necessary to wrap the sphagnum in a mantel pan. If, however, the moss is banked up high enough to need it, wrap over the moss and around the pan with hemp twine, much as is done with wire frames. If an extra long mantel is to be decorated, and you desire to use your average size pan, piece out at each end with a fern plant or a flat basket filled with fern leaves stemmed and set in sphagnum. If the mantel is too deep, pull the pan to the front and spread out foliage from the pan backwards. Fifty lilies were used on this mantel. On the right side, where the lilies appear so much taller, they were set in a tall vase which was planted firmly in the moss in the pan. This vase was not supposed to show.

The smilax was, of course, put up first. The lower draperies were caught with wire, one end of which was attached to a pick, and this carried into the sphagnum in the pan. The lilies were wired and inserted in groups with all the good foliage left on the stalk. Some were found to be top-heavy, even although well packed into the sphagnum. They were let alone to lean as they would. Turn the flowers every way, in, out and facing the mirror. The mantel here pictured and the molding of the mirror were light in color, and displayed to good advantage the green drapery, while the lilies were nearly all thrown against the reflecting surface of the mirror. There was no banking in the fireplace. This is not necessary unless the latter is unsightly, and even then it will never show when the room becomes crowded.

Gertrude Blair.

SEASON FOR WATCHFULNESS.

September and October are usually two of the most trying months for the rose grower, and to carry the crops successfully over this period requires constant care and a great deal of skill and forethought. The evils which beset the plants at this season are many and owing to the natural propensity to take a rest they are in a less vigorous state to resist the encroachments of the many troubles to which they are heirs.

Owing to this decrease in root activity greater care must be exercised in adjusting the supply of water to suit the actual requirements of the plants and, as evaporation is also on the decrease and any excess of water on the bench will act in a very detrimental manner to the health of the stock, it is obvious that too much care cannot be taken to keep them in condition to enter the long winter without a handicap.

The transition from natural to artificial heat should be very gradual and great care should be taken in watering and ventilating. Where the pipes are under the benches the greatest care is necessary in order to keep the soil uniformly moist. Previous to applying artificial heat the benches are heated from above by the sun's rays and the state of the soil is easily gauged, but with artificial heating this condition is in many cases reversed, the heat affecting the bottom of the soil first, hence the necessity of a more careful inspection.

The art of ventilation plays an important part in preparing rose stock for the winter and if this is neglected or carelessly performed we are sure to have a stock of troubles which will last during the winter. Ventilating should be begun as early in the morning as the temperature begins to rise whether this is caused by the heat of the sun or by artificial heat, and should be gradually increased as the day warms, taking care never to give so much at a time as to lower the temperature of the house perceptibly and avoiding draughts.

The same care should be exercised in reducing the ventilation during the afternoon, taking particular care that the ventilators are not closed down so much at a time as to raise the temperature over 5°, unless in cases of emergency such as a sudden lowering in the outside temperature, accompanied by cold rains or snow, showers, etc. By a careful study of outside conditions the grower can by intelligent manipulation of valves and ventilators (if he has a good command of heat), create conditions inside the houses favorable to his crops at all stages and control those conditions just as he desires.

BEAUTIES AND TEAS.

We have one house 100 feet long, partitioned off. In one half we grow Beauties and in the other half Bridesmaid and Golden Gate. Our Beauties were planted May 7 in five inches of good soil and have attained the height of three and one-half feet and about twelve inches through. As I do not want the flowers for some time yet, please give me some advice as to disbudding and general care. Two of our benches in the other house are two-year-old plants and the other two one-year-old. What advice as to disbudding and thinning out, and also what temperature would you keep them during the winter?

I would also like to say that our carnations were planted July 18 and started along finely up to about August 25, when I noticed that there were quite a few plants dying off. I would like to know the reason and how I could prevent it. Would also like to know of some good fungicide to spray on carnations, and how often, as a preventive to diseases.

Subscriber.

It depends a good deal when you want the Beauties to come into crop. If you wish to defer the blooming season till late October or November, cut off half the flower stem. By picking off the crown or first bud you can have another good bud from the base of the bud stem in from three to five weeks.

The general care of Beauty stock from now on consists in keeping them in a free growing condition, allowing no check to take place either from over-watering, want of water or an atmospheric chill. Abundance of ventilation, even at the expense of an all night fire, is absolutely essential in order to discourage black spot and other fungous troubles. Above all have the foliage dry over night. The temperature should never be less than 58 degrees during the night, with a good crack of air on.

The two-year-old stock should get a partial rest and have some of the old soil removed. Then sprinkle some air-slaked lime over the bench and apply a mulch of equal parts of decomposed cow manure and good fibrous soil. The smaller wood should be thinned out and the stronger shoots tied down as nearly horizontal as possible to encourage the dormant eyes at the base of the stem to break. Give one thorough watering and keep the house as cool and moist as possible for the first ten days. Then as the eyes break and fresh leaves develop, increase the supply of water and ventilation. Temperature during winter should be for Brides and Maids, 56 degrees during the night, increasing to 75 degrees or even 80 degrees, according to intensity of sunshine.

The cause of your carnations dying off in the bench is undoubtedly stem-rot, caused by some form of bacteria, for which as yet there is no certain remedy. Pull out all the affected plants and remove the surrounding soil, replace with fresh soil and add about one-sixteenth of its bulk of equal parts of air-slaked lime and sulphur. So many different forms of fungi attack the carnation that without some more definite information any general advice might lead to disaster. Questions on carnations, giving full details of the trouble, will without doubt be carefully considered by either Mr. Osborn or Mr. Baur, who are fully competent to handle such if given sufficient data.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

The Soil Pile.

It is an excellent plan to prepare soil a year previous to its being used and, to obtain the best results, it should be done before fall rains or cold weather set in. Some growers build a pile of sod scattering manure between the layers. Others plow a piece of sod and leave to the action of frost until spring, when the soil is thrown into piles. Either method is good but in deciding which is the most advisable to pursue, much depends on how the land has been worked previous to its being gotten ready for bench soil.

If the ground has been in sod for many years it is very liable to harbor grubs and cut worms and the latter method would aid in the destruction of these pests. This method, too, consumes less time and is probably the less expensive, a greater part of the work being done by horses. Whether to spread the manure before or after plowing or add when making into piles in spring has been a question with some, but considering the loss that must take place when manure is exposed to the weather, there is little doubt but that it is economy to add the manure at time of making into piles.

When circumstances permit, I favor the piling of sod and manure in alternate layers, making the piles not over four feet in height and flat on top. When cut down in the spring and thrown into another pile the ingredients will be thoroughly mixed and in excellent mechanical condition when wanted for use. I would add nothing else to the soil at this time unless it might be a small quantity of air slaked lime which will help keep it sweet. sweet.

Do not fail to lay up enough soil for use in potting young stock at propagating time. No manure should be used, just plain sod piled grass side down, and locate it where it can be readily reached during the winter. After the first hard freeze cover with boards, straw, etc., to prevent frost getting in too far and you can draw on this supply any time desired.

We are having the best of weather for carnation growth and close attention must be paid to the new shoots now coming up. Keep them within their proper bounds and thus form the foundation of a stocky plant.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

A TINY WORM.

I send some tops of Maud Dean chrysanthemum which seem to be affected with disease. Can you inform me what it is? Other varieties in the same house seem perfectly healthy. What can be done with these? Would you advise pinching the tops off and letting them break again? D. E. G.

The trouble with the tops of the Maud Dean chrysanthemum is caused by a tiny worm that will be found burrowing inside the stem of the plant, just at the extreme tip. If the correspondent will cut the stem open he will find the cause of his troubles. I have seen traces of this pest every year, but never anything beyond an occasional plant would be affected. The worm causing the trouble is so small as to be almost invisible and its presence would hardly be noticed.

I think if the affected shoots are very numerous I would pinch them out and let the plants come away again with several shoots until it could be determined that they were all right. Any shoots that are all right should be left, as it is really too late now to be pinching shoots, only in a case of necessity such as this. BRIAN BORU.

GERANIUM ST. CLAIR.

ABUTILON AND HIBISCUS.

I would like to know the time and best way to propagate abutilon and hibiscus. C. F. A.

As the abutilon and hibiscus are associated in this question we will suppose that C. F. A. alludes to Hibiscus Rosa-Sinensis, the evergreen greenhouse flowering shrub. As the abutilon and hibiscus are closely allied genera, the method of propagation is about the same. All the abutilons will root easily from the tips of the young growth, but they root more quickly and surely after firing has begun, in December on to April.

The hibiscus should be kept cool and rather dormant during midwinter and in March should be pruned hard back to secure the young growths that will produce the flower. The young growths that are made after pruning are just what you want for propagating.

Allow me to say that at this very moment, or rather at this lovely season of the year, the hardy hibiscus usually known as althæa or rose of sharon is a magnificent shrub, one of the best of all our hardy flowering shrubs, rather tender when small and transplanted, but when well established there are few if any more lovely shrubs or dwarf trees. Clematis paniculata, the rose of sharon and a few other things make us think just now that the world is all right. W. S.

IRISES AND LILIES.

Will you kindly tell us the best time to set a bed of Japanese and German irises? Also tell us the time to set lilies of various kinds, auratum, rubrum and album. A customer wishes these in a bed in the full sun all day, merely a row of peonies through from east to west. Could any annual be grown among them to shade the ground so they would do well in this situation? G. F. H.

Iris, both the German and Japanese species (and the forms and varieties are legion), should be planted in early fall; the end of this month or first week of October will do. Although the iris is a very hardy plant, it will be well to protect these transplanted roots with litter or leaves the coming winter, to prevent the frequent thawing and freezing that often occurs in March and April. Although the iris is often grown with success in dry situations, it is well known that low, wet land is where they thrive best. Our native species are found growing in low, marshy meadows. I have in mind a pasture that is covered with two or three feet of water all winter and frequently flooded in summer, yet last June it was a wave of blue with the pretty little iris, all of which goes to prove that you cannot overwater them. We read that the Japanese, in culitvating the wonderful varieties of their iris, use the strongest animal manure and flood their gardens.

The soil conditions that suit the irises are just the opposite to what the lilies require. A heavy soil is not at all suited to the species you wish to grow. The soil should be light, either sandy or gravelly, and the drainage perfect. Use no manure unless it is thoroughly decayed, but a heavy mulching of manure will be of benefit in early spring. Many grand borders of Lilium auratum are seen in the temperate countries of Europe and those seen in England are often grown in peat, a soil that seems to suit them grandly.

L. auratum and the varieties of L. speciosum rubrum and album are hardy here, at least as far north as Vermont. If you could obtain the bulbs of these, say in early October, you could plant them then and if protected so that little, if any, frost touched the bulbs, it might be successful. But we don't get the bulbs of these lilies until December and sometimes later. Therefore I would rather keep them in cold storage, covered with dry earth or sand, and plant out as soon as the ground could be worked in spring. We see beautiful flowers of album and rubrum in the gardens of our villagers that we believe receive no more care than the "piny" root, yet a good winter covering to keep out hard freezing is a great essential.

Some annuals that are not of too strong growth might be scattered among the lilies, but don't overdo it. Portulaca would be pretty and there are others.

SOW BUGS.

Will you kindly tell us how to get rid of sow bugs? A Subscriber.

Sow bugs or wood lice may be trapped in various ways; for example, with slices of potato or turnip laid around the greenhouse, these insects creeping beneath such an object to feed upon its lower surface, but naturally this method requires quite a little time on the part of the trapper in order to catch and destroy the insects.

A less troublesome method would be to secure a few common toads and place them in the greenhouse, these homely animals having a wonderful appetite for sow bugs, ants and many other insects, and doing no harm whatever to vegetation.

COKE VS. PEA COAL.

A correspondent writes that he "would like to open a discussion as to the relative merits of coke and anthracite pea coal as a fuel, particularly in hot water plants. Is coke at $3 per ton cheaper than anthracite pea coal at $4 per ton? The question of additional attention and night fireman would perhaps come into this, but we would take it for granted there would have to be a night fireman in any case, so that question can, I think, be eliminated."

Before entirely eliminating the question of a night fireman, let me say that there are any number of small places heated, perhaps, with one or two cast iron heaters. I call them heaters, because they don't boil. If properly set, with good circulation and sufficient pipe, the fuel for them is the best hard coal, egg or grate size. The place is too small to employ a night fireman and the boss fires himself and if, adequately heated, he can fire up at 11 p. m. and find his houses all right at 6 a. m. That he can't do with pea coal or coke.

Now to the specific question, coke versus pea coal. It is impossible to give an opinion on this unless you state what kind of a boiler you are using. If it is a cast iron pot, which nearly all these greenhouse heaters are, whether they are sectional or not, then I think that pea coal is most unsatisfactory for use in them. It soon deadens over, quickly clinkers, needs continual renewing, if only a shovel full, and would not be nearly as cheap as furnace coke at the prices quoted. Hard or furnace coke, such as Connellsville, is the most satisfactory and cheapest fuel you can use in these cast iron heaters.

Particularly is this the case if you are not over-supplied with pipes and in cold weather you have to make the heater do all it can, that is, keep it at full blast all night. I would say under these conditions, which too often prevail, that pea coal in a cast iron heater would be fifty per cent more expensive than furnace coke at the prices quoted.

The writer has had occasion during the last thirty-six years in this country to use most every kind of available fuel from Lehigh lump to cord wood, hard coal, Loyal Sock coal, soft coal, hard coke and gas-house coke. Now, if you put in a steel tubular boiler or a tubular boiler with cast iron tubes, which is about the same, there is no fuel so effective and cheap as good Pennsylvania soft coal. I am speaking now of using these boilers for circulating hot water, but if for making steam it is all the same, for what will make water hot will also make it boil.

Soft coal necessitates cleaning of the flues frequently and in some surroundings your neighbors kick, but otherwise soft coal is the fuel for a tubular boiler. Pea coal is used by some large eastern firms in these boilers and with frequent attention it does very well, but it cannot give as good results as soft coal. The flame traveling beneath the length of the boiler and back through the tubes is where soft coal has the advantage. I never noticed that coke did any harm to a cast iron boiler, but it is very injurious to a wrought iron boiler. We have wandered a little from the subject, which is unavoidable. It's a big one but most interesting, and no one can give a definite answer unless he knew how big your place is and what style of heater you have installed.

DEATH OF GROVE P. RAWSON.

Grove P. Rawson, of Elmira, N. Y., died at Binghamton September 8, whence he had gone to superintend a wedding decoration. He had not been feeling well for several weeks. He was seated watching the work of his assistants when he collapsed and was removed to the hospital, where he died about three hours later without regaining consciousness. The cause of death was cerebral apoplexy.

Grove P. Rawson was born in Almond, Allegany county, N. Y., April 22, 1854. As a boy he displayed a marked interest in all objects botanical and not only did he love things that grow from mother earth, but he was respectful toward all that was God given. He was an apt student of horticulture and one of the best pupils of the celebrated James Vick, of Rochester. He had not in years attained his majority, when, in 1874, he came as landscape architect of Eldridge park, in Elmira, now one of the best known and most popular in the state. Two years later Mr. Rawson entered business in his own behalf and for twenty-eight years he was one of the foremost growers of plants and cut flowers in the state. As a decorator he was excelled by few. For more than a quarter of a century he has had a greenhouse and office at No. 107 West Market street. Years ago the business outgrew the capacity there and property was purchased on Winsor avenue. There two acres are under glass. He had that happy faculty of getting along with men few possess. His orders were not as commands in the ears of his subordinates. They seemed always eager to please him, appreciating his many kindnesses toward them and Friday morning a group of employes stood just outside the big greenhouse talking almost in whispers, although the body was still miles away.

Mr. Rawson was, up to the last few years, an active participant in the affairs of our trade societies, the S. A. F., the Chrysanthemum Society and the Carnation Society. He was also for some time a widely read contributor to the horticultural press. He had never married.

QUINLAN'S NEW PLANT.

The accompanying illustrations are reproductions of photographs taken at P. R. Quinlan & Co.'s carnation houses at Onondaga Valley. August 26. The houses contain 15,000 plants. For many years past Mr. Quinlan leaned mostly to roses, the best houses on the old place in the city being devoted to them. Upon the carnation becoming such a popular rival of the rose, he perceived its importance and accordingly laid his plans to give it the best possible environments. The site at Onondaga Valley, comprising nineteen acres, was selected because of its natural resources, variety of good soils, water and beautiful perspective. The construction is that of the King Construction Co., the same as is employed by the famous Dale estate at Brampton, Ont.

Indoor culture all the while and planting early from the field has been practiced, with results today in favor of the field crop, although it is rather soon to make a positive statement as to the merits of either system, the present season being the most congenial in years for outdoor carnations. Where thrifty stock was planted out they developed into planting shape very early and were all housed on this place before August 1.

July planting, to say the least, has many advantages with the grower whose business demands flowers on good stems early in the season. In such roomy, airy houses no shading was required, wilting after planting being hardly perceptible, perhaps owing to selecting the cuttings from the sand bed after rooting and again before planting out discarding all with any sign of bacteria or fungus. Stem-rot has given no trouble. Thirty-five varieties are grown, practically all the new kinds being represented. In these Lady Bountiful is very promising. For bulk in white, Queen, Boston Market and Wolcott are grown; pink, Lawson, Joost, Cressbrook and Marquis; for salmon, Enchantress, Fair Maid; for red, Estelle, Crane and Manley are grown.

POLLINATING TOMATOES.

I read with interest the note in the Review of August 25 regarding the saving of pollen from outdoor tomatoes as spoken of by Mr. O'Mara in the discussion on pollination at the St. Louis convention of the S. A. F. I think the plan is a good one, and where carried out should be of great assistance in overcoming the difficulty which is often met with in setting the first indoor crop. It does not take long to gather a few bunches of flowers and put them away in paper bags so that if needed the pollen will be at hand. I know from experience that the pollen will keep in good condition for six or eight weeks if kept perfectly dry and not subjected to extreme temperatures. It is not always necessary to use the pollen thus gathered, as under favorable conditions enough can often be procured from the plants themselves. I find that it is not so much from the lack of pollen in the flowers that the trouble arises, but that the pollen is often left bound up in the anthers of the flowers for lack of sunshine which is necessary to burst the cellular tissues and set the pollen free. Hence, during the prevalence of dull weather, of which we are very liable to have spells during the shortening early winter days, when pollination of the first indoor crop is necessary, it is often a hard matter to procure enough pollen to accomplish the fertilization of the flowers, and the having of a reserve in hand insures against disappointment and leaves one independent of the vicissitudes of the weather.

As far as the fruit itself is concerned, it is of little matter from what variety the pollen is procured, but these fruits should not be selected for seed purposes unless for the purpose of experiment, and then it would be necessary to make sure of the variety from which the pollen was procured. But where it is desired to save any variety, to keep the strain straight, it is necessary to use only the pollen produced by that variety. It is hardly necessary, however, to save seeds from the indoor fruit. I make a custom of growing a few plants of the varieties used for forcing outdoors, and save my seeds from them. I consider that, being grown under more natural conditions, the seeds mature better and germinate stronger than the indoor article. Besides, most of the varieties used for forcing are profitable to grow outdoors. Sterling Castle is a first-class tomato for early outdoor work, and Lorillard and Best of All are both good croppers. Of course to keep the strain true it is necessary to keep the varieties apart so that they wont be mixed up by insects carrying the pollen from one to another.

THE BENTHEY ASTER.

The accompanying illustrations show Benthey's White aster, of which much has been heard of late. The field contains upwards of two and one-half acres, some 40,000 plants, grown by George Ball, Chicago, whose greenhouses, the old Harms Park place, appear in the background. These are grown for cut flowers and the blooms have sold as high as $4 per 100 in the Chicago market, readily bringing $1 to $2 at times when other varieties grown by Mr. Ball were hardly worth shipping to market. The vase shows a couple of dozen blooms on stems nearly three feet long and averaging four inches in diameter of flower. At the Benthey-Coatsworth Co.'s place at New Castle, Ind., they have a field of over two acres growing for seed. The variety also comes in pink. It was at first called Benthey's Perfection, but as the latter word is a part of the name of other asters it was dropped and the name is simply Benthey's White and Benthey's Pink.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions remain much the same as a week ago, the market continuing to clean up nicely. One or two dull days at the end of the past week shortened up supplies a little. Roses, where no fires are yet used, are showing mildew, due to cold nights. Beauties continue in good supply at from $5 to $20 per 100. Carnots and Kaiserins are good, but Brides and Bridesmaids continue small, although they are improving. Carnations are becoming more abundant, both indoor and outdoor grown. From $1 to $2 per 100 is the average price, some fancy blooms being higher. Some very good asters are coming in. White ones sell readily at $1 to $1.50 per 100, colored varieties going a little lower. Gladioli, speciosum lilies, tuberoses, dahlias and other stock continue in fair supply. Adiantum and Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri are not in much demand.

Various Notes.

A recent call at the Blue Hill Nurseries, in Braintree, found the proprietor, Julius Heurlin, busy making heavy shipments of iris, phlox and other perennials to Pennsylvania. The big blocks of herbaceous perennials were in fine order, one of the finest beds being of the handsome Tritoma Pfitzeri, a plant which is coming into favor with Boston florists. The collection of trees and shrubs, both deciduous and evergreen, is being constantly added to. An adjoining field has just been purchased to be planted with choice evergreens. The whole nursery was, as usual, scrupulously clean. Mr. Heurlin reported fall sales to be the best on record.

A delegation from the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club visited Nahant on September 8 as guests of Thomas Roland. The party left Union Wharf per steamer at 9:30 a. m. Although the day was beautifully clear and warm, with a shade temperature up in the eighties, one half of the party went prepared for eventualities and carried fall overcoats. An hour's sail down Boston harbor, with its charming scenery, brought the tourists to Nahant, where they were cordially welcomed by Mr. Roland. After an inspection of his well-kept greenhouses, which were filled to repletion with choice stock, luncheon was served, following which a tour of the picturesque island was made. Several fine estates were inspected and the party basked on the rocks near Senator Lodge's summer home for an hour or two. The beautiful views from this "stern and rock bound coast" over the broad and placid Atlantic, dotted with all manner of craft, was thoroughly enjoyed by everyone. Boston was reached on the return voyage about 5 o'clock and an hour later, while the members were eating their suppers, Jupiter Pluvius, after a vacation of three weeks, broke the drought from which we had been suffering. Mr. Roland's kindness in inviting the party was much appreciated and the visit to Nahant will remain a very pleasant memory.

The new Music Hall market is evidently going to be quite a factor in Boston's cut flower business. At last reports 130 stalls had been rented and more were likely to be sold, as the full capacity of the present flower place is 170 stalls, which, however, can be doubled in the future if occasion requires. The directors can certainly congratulate themselves on their auspicious outlook.

The decision of the Columbus avenue market directors to go back to the old Park street stand October 1 is undoubtedly a wise move. The location, while rather cramped, is easy of access for teams and, while the light is somewhat defective, it has in this respect an advantage over the Music Hall market. We understand the management has rented the present market on advantageous terms. It is to be hoped that to avoid confusion some shorter name be given the rival concerns. Park Street Market and Music Hall Market would be preferable to Boston Co-operative Flower Growers' Association and Boston Co-operative Flower Market.

The Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club will resume the monthly meetings on September 20. Some of the members are to give vacation experiences. An interesting array of lecturers is being selected for the coming winter and now is an opportune time to join this progressive club.

J. W. Duncan is spending a few days in New London, Conn.

Thomas Knight, representing Julius Roehrs, has been canvassing Boston and vicinity the past week and reports a good call for his firm's specialties.

Numerous entries are being received for the flower show opening on September 22. It promises to be one of the best on record.

Members of the Boston Mycological Club continue to make interesting displays of fungi each week at Horticultural Hall.

Bunches of that finest of all bouvardias, Humboldtii corymbiflora, were noted in one of the stores the past week. Strange that more florists do not grow it.

The annual rental of stalls in each of the flower markets is $25. Prices realized at auction are additional premiums.

W. N. Craig.

Co-operation.

The Review is in receipt of an "open letter" on the two co-operative markets in Boston, a lengthy document bearing typewritten signatures and couched in such intemperate language that we cannot publish it. The Review has nothing but the best of wishes for the success of the new market and nothing but the best of wishes for the continued prosperity of the old, for in each there are many estimable gentlemen; we certainly would not do injustice to either.—Ed.

Two and a Half Acre Field of Benthey's Aster Grown by Geo. Ball, Chicago.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The market shows signs of awakening. The retailers are doing a little business now and then. Their stores are ready, their windows bright, their assistants back. The wholesalers have the serious proposition of a rapidly increasing stock to handle, an increase that materially exceeds the demand. Dahlias have been selling very poorly. The season for the best varieties is about to open and with their appearance an improvement is expected in all sorts.

The increase in the proportion of poorer asters gives notice that their season has passed its height. The best still sell quickly at good prices. Cosmos is fine in solid colors and can be had in quantity. Roses are very plentiful. Carnations are improving in quality. Quite a lot of nice blooms are coming into town. Good gladioli sell, but poor ones never. The supply of tuberoses does not exceed the demand.

The Century's Window.

Frank Gaul, manager of the Century Flower Shop, has arranged a window that is attracting attention this week. It represents a Japanese garden, with miniature beds and paths laid out in approved Japanese style. The center was chiefly made of Cyrtomium falcatum while Adiantum Farleyense graced many of the smaller beds. A tiny fountain, petrified rock and Japanese figures cleverly arranged gave reality to the scene.

The Palm Industry.

Charles D. Ball has experienced an active demand for palms during August and the first half of September, as the conditions in his houses at Holmesburg prove. Many plants have been spread for better development and several entire benches have been refilled with a second batch of palms shifted for late sales.

Kentia Belmoreana in all sizes, from the large specimens to the fernery center-piece in a 3-inch pot have increased enormously in numbers. The made-up plants of this variety are very prominent in sizes from 6-inch upward. Some are made up in the now popular way with a large plant in the center surrounded by several smaller ones, but generally Mr. Ball favors early making up with plants of equal size and strength, believing that in this way a better effect is produced. House after house of this variety were seen in excellent condition, the center bench in each being filled with medium and large plants, the side benches with stuff for ferneries or for growing on through the winter.

Kentia Forsteriana and Areca lutescens are grown in good form. A center bench of Latania Borbonica in eights, now partly emptied, was a fine sight, the plants being very symmetrical. Another house of the same palm in sixes was just coming into shape.

Boston ferns, Pandanus Veitchii and Cocos Weddeliana finished the assortment, if I remember aright. A new house 13x120 feet, brick foundations, single span, was built this season for summer use. It has done so well that Mr. Ball expects to pipe it for use this winter.

Torresdale.

Yes, the conductor knew where Eisenhart's was, stopping opposite. The passenger was halted by a scorching wheelman only to narrowly escape a flying automobile and finally landed in a well-kept place with a large house fronting on the pike (familiar word) surrounded by a green lawn with enough flowers in beds to give a touch of color.

Alas, there was no sign of R. M. Eisenhart in the greenhouses beyond. That he was up and doing the neat rows of carnations, violets and corn abundantly proved. One carnation house was planted with prime stock and a range of four others, mud shaded and soil filled, will probably be planted before these lines see light. May they all prosper.

The Germantown Society.

The September meeting of the Germantown Horticultural Society was a banner event owing to the efforts of Albert Woltemate and C. S. Wertsner, exhibits and attendance being unusually large. Henry A. Dreer Co. sent a good collection of hardy perennial blooms. The other exhibitors were all from Germantown. Most nobly did they acquit themselves. Some idea may be gathered from the fact that there were fifteen exhibitors of pears alone. Edward Neville presided.

Various Notes.

C. F. Edgar & Co. have a new wagon on the street this week. They have improved their office facilities and are preparing for an active season.

Leo Niessen is receiving fine Beauties in quantity.

Charles P. Poryzees, who delayed opening his new Fifteenth street store until this week, will carry on both his old and new stores.

M. Rice & Co. have added the third, fourth and fifth floors and expect to add the second floor of the building east of their present store. The new floors have been extensively improved.

D. T. Conner has just put in a new Lord & Burnham boiler for Robert Crawford, Jr.

Fred J. Michell states that the Dutch bulbs just received by his firm are the best in many years. Tulips, hyacinths and narcissi are all very fine.

J. D. Eisele, vice-president of the H. A. Dreer Co., is in Europe.

John Burton is sending out a neat blotter suggesting the advantage of buying direct from the growers at the Flower Market.

Julius Koehler & Son have very attractive show windows in their store at Main and Bridge streets, Frankford.

Fred Ehret is pleased by the return of a consignor who, after shipping to him for fourteen years, tried a year elsewhere and has now come back to him again.

A humorist at Henry F. Michell Co. said that had Phil handled those 400 cases of bulbs he could have written a story about it. They were heavy, those cases.

William J. Baker is responsible for the bright saying that "a man doesn't go to a store to talk about his family or private affairs; he will go to a residence for that."

C. F. Edgar & Co. are preparing to push their new cornucopia flower holders.

Charles E. Meehan states that business at the Flower Market is steadily improving since the move to the present central quarters.

PHIL.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Trade in general was not active the past week, slow in everything except funeral work. Some were very busy with large designs. Labor day did not bring much, nor did the opening of the public schools. Transient trade has begun with the down-town retailers and the general revival of business is looked for soon. Stock seems to be improving every day, especially during the few cool days, but most of the retailers are very conservative regarding their purchases.

Roses are very plentiful, though a certain proportion of short-stemmed stock is in the market. It is usually very good in flower. Prices on choice Brides, Maids, Meteors and Perles are from $4 to $5 per 100. Short stock is sold very cheap, in 1,000 lots as low as $8. First-class carnations are still short in supply, although plenty of field-grown stock is in the market. Short-stemmed stock with good flowers and long-stemmed stock with poor flowers are hard to dispose of. All they bring is about $1 per 100. A few of the best bring $1.50 to $2. Good valley is hard to sell in this market just now. Asters are still abundant and good stock can be bought for $1 per 100. Extra large white and purple bring $2.

Thousands of gladioli are being brought over from the Cowee farm near Belleville and sold to the west end hotels cheaper than the retail florists can buy them. The flowers are being used for table decorations. This is not much to the liking of the west end florists, who claim it hurts their trade. To some extent the flowers bring 3 cents a stalk at wholesale houses. Tuberose stalks are very plentiful at 2 cents. Clematis paniculata sells well for funeral work. Some cosmos is in but not in sufficient quantity to go around. In the line of greens, adiantum has some demand.

Club Meeting.

September 8 the club held its first meeting since the convention, also the most enthusiastic held this year. When the president called for order thirty members were present. All committee reports impressed the members favorably, especially that of C. A. Kuehn, who was superintendent of the trade display during the convention. Two new applications for membership were made, by W. A. Chalfant, of Springfield, Mo., and Andrew Olsen, of St. Louis. This makes the necessary two to make up 100 members, which was promised before the new president was installed.

The installation of the new officers took place. Messrs. Ammann and Weber were the installing officers. With a few well chosen remarks, Mr. Juengel took the chair. Then Vice-President Pilcher, Secretary Schray, Treasurer Meinhardt and the trustees, Messrs. Weber, Miller and Guy, were duly installed.

The question of a flower show at the World's Fair in the Horticulture building was turned down and the club will not have anything to do with the proposition. There was quite a lively tilt over some questions from the box, after which the meeting adjourned.

Mr. Juengel notified the members that a supper was awaiting them at the Michalob restaurant, at which nearly all the members sat down to a fine spread. After supper speeches were made by J. F. Ammann, Theo. Miller, E. W. Guy, C. A. Juengel and ex-President Beneke. The next meeting will be held Thursday afternoon, October 13.

Various Notes.

H. J. Venn, of Canton, Ill., called last week, as did James Colbert, of Rossville, Ill.

Charlie Ford, of Philadelphia, got in Saturday to take in the fair, not having had time during the convention.

Mr. and Mrs. Phil Hauswirth, of Chicago, spent Friday and Saturday in St. Louis on their way to St. Joseph to attend the Red Men's convention.

J. F. Windt reports trade very good since he completed his new show house, which is very attractive.

H. Weber & Sons, at Gardenville, Mo., report a large amount of orders to fill for fall delivery in nursery stock.

A. Jablonsky, at Wellston, has almost completed his new range of houses, which will be used for growing carnations for the trade.

John Steidle in the same neighborhood is also in good shape for the coming season, with fine carnation plants. His violets, too, are looking fine.

J. W. Dunford, also a close neighbor to the above two, is making great preparations for the winter season. The carnations and violets grown here are much looked after by the local trade.

Bowling.

The bowling for the silver water pitcher is becoming very interesting. Eddie Gerlach now leads, with Frank Ellis second and Ellison third. The following scores were made Monday night:

Credit to All.

Much praise has been bestowed on the management of Forest park from various sources on account of vast improvements in the condition of the park this year. While it is an undeniable fact that each and every man connected with the park has done his best to beautify the same, credit should be placed where it belongs. Robert Aull is park commissioner. Andrew Meyer, Jr., general superintendent of public parks, is the guiding spirit. John Ratchford as keeper, George Ostertag as overseer, and John Moritz, as general gardener, are intrusted with the fulfillment of all park duties. George Ostertag.

North Adams, Mass.—A. H. Darling is planning the erection of an additional house.

Loda, Ill.—The Loda Greenhouses are erecting 6,000 square feet of glass, up-to-date in every respect.

Elkhart, Ind.—Sarah S. Seele, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Seele, died September 7, aged 20 years. Mr. Seele is gardener to Hon. C. G. Conn.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Emilio Ruotolo, of 246 Mott street, New York, is building four greenhouses, 17x72, one 10x78, office, etc., on Sixty-ninth street, near Twentieth avenue.

Current Comment.

There is no great event worthy of special mention. No prominent member of society of late has "kicked the bucket" but lots of good souls have "shuffled off this mortal coil," which has helped along general business. I believe the man who first said "mortal coil" was William of Avon. What faith, what marvelous philosophy, for the age (the fifteenth century) in which he lived. Skeptics and free thinkers believe that this avoirdupois is all there is of life, but Shakespeare believed that the corporal body was a coil or medium for the soul to rise upwards and onwards. If we all had the intellect of the immortal bard we could not look up and admire him so. Things are, as I have had before the pleasure to remark, just exactly right and if they are not, who is going to do it?

Mr. Jeffords, of Corfu, sold out his three houses and one acre of land to Le Roy Adams. Mr. Adams has been renting the greenhouses of Mrs. Tyrell and was so successful that he was able to buy out Mr. Jeffords. Mr. Jeffords thinks of buying ten acres in the neighborhood of Medina, near Ontario's shore, and erecting a small but model plant.

Mrs. L. Bantam Ostrich, of Richville, Genesee county, the famous aster grower, lost her favorite tame crow last week. She regrets this exceedingly, as she believes that Pompey (the crow) picked off a good many bugs.

Mr. Ficuslarger Vodskii, lately from Poland, has purchased two acres of land on the eastern border of the city and will erect several thousand feet of glass. His specialties will be rubbers, but he does not expect a brisk market for them until sloppy weather begins.

Seriously, there is nothing very important to say. Anderson has his much improved store about finished and it's a beauty.

The William Scott Co. embellished the club house at the Kenilworth race track for the fall meeting and in addition to the moderate price charged, it included a daily pass. "You just ought to see the six boys and the old man fuss over that pass. For the land's sake won't you ever get sense? Child, you ain't no man!"—Mrs. S.

Lewis H. Neubeck has a splendid lot of Begonia Lorraine and Louie's place is always most attractive. He is on the road, that is his place is, to the General Hospital and as most everybody nowadays has to go to the hospital to have his vermiform appendix cut out, and as all you can send a patient newly out of the anesthetics is flowers, why, Louis does well. So large is his business in this specialty that he has ready-made what he calls his vermiform bouquet. It is in the form of a pork sausage and of all sizes to suit ages and any flavor you choose.

At Toronto.

As usual with pleasure and gratitude we journeyed to the beautiful city above mentioned to pass our opinion on the cut flowers and designs at Canada's great fair. How great will best be judged when it is known that Monday, September 5, there were 130,000 people in the grounds. We were listening to the band of the Forty-second Black Watch Highlanders, who for the past 150 years have borne the brunt of Great Britain's battles, when a great, fine man with a little gray lady struck up a talk. She thought it poor after the World's Fair and the people looked so poor and common after her city (Denver). An explanation that this was an annual permanent fair did some good, yet I don't suppose it was lasting. 'Tis true, as Dibden wrote:

To the west, to the west, to the land of the free,
Where the mighty Missouri runs down to the sea,
Where a man is a man if he's willing to toil,
And the humblest may gather the fruits of the soil.

But they do get an awful swelled head out west. If they can keep it up, all right. But how about the granary of the world, Manitoba. You don't hear such a great shout and yet there is nowhere on this continent such marvelous growth in wealth and general development as in the prairie provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

If you want to see mother and father pigs (they call them by the biblical name of swine in Canada) sixteen feet long and weighing 1,000 pounds, cross Lake Ontario. If you want to see Leister sheep as big as the ordinary cow, go to Toronto, and if you want to see horses, why, they beat us hollow. There is one thing most admirable about the fair. You can't get a thing on the grounds except orange lemonade, except you know the treasurer or happen to meet Andy Adams, who said he was justified because Mrs. A. was subject to sinking spells, like poor Sarah Gamp.

It's supposed that my notes will be horticultural. Well, the exhibit of plants, particularly foliage and ornamental, was extremely good. It would be hard to beat in any city five times its size. The cut flower and design exhibit, over which we had to think, was no larger than other years, although as you all know there is John Dunlop and the Dale Estate and Walter Muston, who can't be beat as growers of roses. The designs for conception and execution were right up-to-date. The only flower that surpassed previous exhibits was the asters. A vase of daybreak pink, of the branching type with flowers five inches across and stems at least four feet long was like a vase of Maud Dean mums.

We are greatly indebted to the courtesy of George Vair, the veteran and easily the dean of all the horticulturists of Toronto. He showed us places we had never seen before and put up with our idiosyncrasies. And then there is good John Chambers, the park superintendent of Toronto. If you are lucky enough to know John and are tired of orange lemonade, you can walk up to his porch and ask what the thermometer registers. I had little opportunity to see more than the Exhibition park, Queens park and the Horticultural gardens and they all looked in fine order. Like most of our cities, the appropriation for parks and public grounds is cut down to the lowest living mark. Yet Mr. Chambers, I am glad to say, as do most of our park superintendents, makes the meagre appropriation go as far as possible. When politics enter our park management it's a calamity for the community.

Mr. Chambers saved my wife's life. A Highlander struck up "The Campbells are Coming" on the bag pipes. She swooned, but a bunch of "Grissley Frontenac" from the hand of J. C. restored her to life and liberty.

I spent two hours with John Dunlop at his model place, but there is so much to say about that, that if you will allow me it will be continued in our next. First race is called at 2:30. W. S.

PITTSBURG CLUB MEETING.

The meeting of the Pittsburg and Allegheny Florists' and Gardeners' Club, September 6, was addressed by Mr. Zimmerman, of Dixmont, who attended the S. A. F. convention at St. Louis and also visited the parks and gardens there and the World's Fair and noted things horticultural, for he had agreed on coming back to tell us all about them.

At the convention Scott's fern pleased him greatly and he declared that the plants of the other exhibitors were as fine a lot of marketable size stock as he ever saw together. They all were clean and healthy.

The great variety of plants at Shaw's garden tickled his fancy and he wandered through the arboretum and enjoyed the collection of trees, because they were labeled. At Tower Grove park he was charmed with the showing of victorias and tropical water lilies in heated outdoor ponds and hardy lilies in cold waters. But he was disappointed in the World's Fair gardens. Those of the cascades and the sunken gardens were all right, but he found fault with the coarseness and unkemptness of many of the others and it was quite amusing to see him show us how the man in the clockhouse helped the machinery up the hill.

He was a little severe on some of the displays. His own cannas at home looked better than those at St. Louis and he didn't see a bit of carpet bedding worth looking at. But he was charmed with Ageratum Stella Gurney; it was used extensively and everywhere it was a sheet of bloom, whereas at home with himself it was all growth and foliage and very little bloom. Coleuses were brighter than with us, because they were unpinched. Alternantheras were very dead in color and the vivid brilliantissima didn't seem to be used at all. Plant lettering was very poor. The African tamarix used as a border plant, as we used to plant boxwood, was a new wrinkle to him. But when he talked about cleaning up the place he sort of raised his arms and clenched his fists and as he is a big man he didn't look pleasant.

It was also gladiolus and China aster night. The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. showed some magnificent red, white and purple asters. I believe they were grown in northwestern New York. Although sometimes we can grow good asters about Pittsburg, Munro county, New York, can beat us all to pieces.

Of gladiolus we had a magnificent showing. John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, N. Y., sent about 750 spikes in bunches of twenty-five of each kind and printed labels with all of them. And he had a real cute device for sticking the labels on. It consisted of a sharp pin, with a round head like a split ring; into this ring you fix the label, then stick the pin anywhere you please. Get a bunch of cards and a box of pins and a pencil; it's all you need. His flowers were superb and included a great range of color, from deep maroon, through scarlet, pink, white and yellow.

Frank Banning, of Kinsman, O., sent a dozen sheaves of gigantic beauties three to four feet long and without a blemish on bloom or leaf. His Ruben H. Warder was the finest pink gladiolus in the room and his "1900" one of the most brilliant reds. Augusta, May and our old love, Eugene Scribe, in his collection were especially fine. And to keep us in a good humor he sent a basketful of selected golden sweet apples, picked from trees in his gladiolus field. They were dealt out to the members two at a time.

Arthur Cowee, of Berlin, N. Y., sent a great variety of very fine blossoms in a very great range of color, including several of the bluish hues that seem so popular just now. What a vast array of these flowers he must have, considering the continuous show he maintains in St. Louis. He gives some good points about cut flowers: "Immediately upon arrival cut off the ends of the stems and place in water. Every day change the water and cut off the ends of the stems, removing the withered blooms at the same time, pulling them off with a downward motion."

At the end of the meeting each member was given half a dozen select spikes to take home with him; the detective agency next door got a bunch because we used its telephone, the janitor got a bunch to keep him in a good humor, for we do make an awful mess of the place sometimes, and all of the balance, nearly a wagon load, was sent to the Mercy hospital.

But that was not all. Next morning the president had a telephone call from the Cut Flower Co.: "Send a wagon to our store for a consignment of gladiolus flowers from M. Crawford, Cuyahoga Falls, O." He sent in for them. They were an assortment of splendid spikes and gorgeous blossoms. Too bad they were too late for our club meeting.

We had lots of nice things to say about the firms who so generously contributed to make our club meeting such a pronounced success. And then our own Cut Flower Co. is so good and accommodating. I don't know what we'd do without them. But we are going to put Mr. Langhans up for president of our club next year. PREX.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

The regular meeting of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Society was held Saturday evening, September 10, President Dunbar in the chair. There was a very fine display of zinneas staged by Messrs. Dunbar, Kastberg, Wilson, Bradley, Keeling and Darcy. Mr. Dunbar was awarded the highest number of points. His blooms were exceptionally large. Mr. Wilson also had a very fine display. Stephen Bradley and Mr. Knifle were the judges. The subject for the next meeting will be dahlias. J. B.

PORT HURON, MICH.—Every florist is entitled to a hobby and Wm. Asman's is pigeons. At the Toronto fair he took a medal and fifteen other prizes.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.—Frank Imbach is propagating Laurus tinus which is not commonly seen in this neighborhood. He thinks it will be useful on the lawns and in the cemetery.

DANVILLE, ILL.—H. D. Caldwell, gardener at the Soldiers' Home, has had very fine success with his bedding this year. He has five greenhouses. Much work will be done on the grounds next spring.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

In looking about the stores and markets the past week one gets a few more smiles and finds a much better state of affairs. The cause is a decided improvement in business, generally distributed among the stores and markets. However, there is no scarcity of stock, except carnations, and reports from the wholesalers is that even with the increase in business the amount of stock coming in is so great that there is almost as large a glut as ever.

A New Store.

Geddis & Blind Bros. opened their new south side store Saturday, which is built on the site of the old one. They are to be congratulated on having one of the prettiest and best appointed stores in the city. All the furnishings are in a very pretty shade of green and the rear of the store opens directly into a conservatory about 20x75, which they had nicely stocked with palms, ferns, and Harrisii lilies in bloom. Instead of giving out cards or souvenirs of any kind, they had several thousand small jardinieres which held a well grown 3-inch fern. They sold the plant and vase for 10 cents, only one to each person. They, no doubt, lost a few cents on each sale, but still it was a lasting and good advertisement. Mr. Geddis says that every house on the south side had one or more on their Sunday dinner table.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club met last Tuesday evening and those who were not there were the losers. The discussion was on gladioli and asters. The out-of-town exhibitors of gladioli were Frank Banning, of Kinsman, O.; John Lewis Childs, Queens, N. Y., and Arthur Cowee, Berlin, N. Y. These gentlemen exhibited about seventy-five of their very best varieties and caused a great deal of discussion as to which were the best. The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., was the only exhibitor of asters. They had some of the finest and largest ever seen here, as well as some of the smaller sorts. Some of the boys wanted to know how they grew them, but Mr. Falconer explained that it was stock consigned to them, and they did not know anything about growing flowers.

Mr. Zimmerman, of Dixmont, had been to St. Louis and our president, who had been there himself, requested Mr. Zimmerman to tell us about all he saw. The question was so large it almost scared him, but being gently led by Mr. Falconer, in his own inimitable way, he told us about the nice people and the pleasant meeting of the S. A. F., the horticultural and floricultural features of the Fair, and the parks. After disposing of a large basket of apples furnished by Frank Banning, a motion was made to have the secretary send letters of thanks to the exhibitors and to make special mention of the apples. When the boys went home they expressed themselves in a hearty manner that it was an evening well spent.

Various Notes.

Mr. McClements, of Randolph & McClements, met with a painful accident last week, by falling in his barn, resulting in a sprained wrist and a badly bruised face.

Gustav Ludwig is back at his place of business after being confined to his home for some time with hay fever.

Jim Higgins is back with Mrs. E. A. Williams.

Visitors: S. S. Skidelsky, Philadelphia, who reports business good and a big demand for the new carnation, Fred Burki; W. M. Steel, of Barton Bros., Uniontown; Chas. Peterson, E. Liverpool, O.; L. Swarthout, Washington, Pa.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Business is undeniably better than it has been for some time but still it is not what it ought to be. The demand is not what it was a year ago, and it must be remembered that at that time there was no particular scramble on the part of the buyers. However, a very slight increase has served to give a better tone to the market. Beauties are still easy and Maids do not show much change, but Brides are stiffer than last week. There are adequate receipts were quality not to be considered, but the supply which is good enough to ship is decidedly limited, though increasing. Chatenay is abundant but it is not a warm weather rose, for it quickly opens wide. A few La France are seen, also a few La Detroit. These are not yet large enough in stem to be notable but the best sell up to 8 cents. Liberty in short lengths is very abundant but sells fairly well at low prices.

Receipts of carnations are on the increase but the market has stiffened considerably within the past week. Asters are on the wane; there are still plenty of them but they are mostly white and there is room to move around in the wholesale houses. Gladioli are not so abundant as a week ago and auratum lilies are scarce. A few good longiflorums are seen. Sweet peas are about done. Valley is faring a little better and so is smilax. There is no shortage in any "green goods."

Club Meeting.

In the absence of the president and vice-president, James Hartshorne presided at the first regular club meeting at Handel Hall September 8. The order of the evening was general discussion.

John C. Ure brought up the subject of Impatiens Sultani for winter blooming. H. N. Bruns said he grew it ten years ago, but dropped it. Mr. Ure said few have it, yet it is a good seller and he is propagating all he can. He has it in all sizes up to 8-inch and 10-inch pots and finds customers will give $2 for good plants. The George Wittbold Co. bought 800 plants of him. He propagates from cuttings, which root readily. It is a good grower.

It was the consensus of opinion that the season is going to be a good one, better than last, and that next spring will see another big increase in the bedding plant business.

It was stated that the ninth floor of the Auditorium has been engaged for the flower show the week following the national election. The carnation show will be held in the same hall the last Wednesday and Thursday in January.

Mr. Hauswirth reported on the S. A. F. convention, taking occasion to say a word for the bowlers. He pointed out that, although a critic has said few of the bowlers are "best at anything of much value to the society," the fact is that of the fifteen living ex-presidents, of whom ten were present in St. Louis, four were active participants in the bowling and most of the others were present.

W. L. Palinsky called attention to the fact that, while New York and other clubs had badges, the Chicago delegation had no distinguishing feature other than its size, which was thereby less apparent. It was the unanimous opinion that the club should have an official badge, which could be either furnished or sold to members, and a motion prevailed that the chairman appoint a committee of

The next meeting will be September 22 when nominations for officers will come up. The election occurs October 27.

A New Firm.

During the week A. L. Vaughan and Fred Sperry have concluded arrangements for opening a general wholesale cut flower and florists' supply business in the Exchange, 58 and 60 Wabash avenue. They plan to carry as full a line of cut flowers as may be had and to put in a stock of florists' supplies which they hope to develop to one of the largest and most complete in the country. They also expect to do considerable business in bulbs. The firm name will be Vaughan & Sperry. Neither gentleman is a stranger to the trade, Mr. Vaughan having traveled with supplies and bulbs for more than sixteen years. He was a member of the old firm of Vaughan, McKellar & Winterson. Mr. Sperry was with Mr. McKellar years ago but has been in Florida recently for his health, which is now of the best.

Various Notes.

D. F. Simonds was eating a sandwich in a refreshment establishment at Ogden avenue and Congress street September 7, when four masked men held up the place. Mr. Simonds, who does business as the Ogden Floral Co., 848 West Harrison, lost $32 and a watch.

Sam Pieser is out after an illness of six weeks, during which he underwent a very successful operation for appendicitis at Wesley hospital. Mrs. G. H. Pieser is at the same institution, convalescing from a three weeks' illness with typhoid. E. E. Pieser is expected home in a few days from Manitoba, where he has been six weeks, during which time he buried Mrs. Pieser's father, who was well along in the eighties.

Bassett & Washburn received 12,000 Japanese longiflorum bulbs on Tuesday. These were shipped direct from Japan by Henry & Lee.

C. W. McKellar is handling Dendrobrium formosum. Few cattleyas are available.

C. M. Dickinson is home from Mt. Clemens and attending to business once more, after seven weeks' illness. He is feeling nearly as well as ever.

Miss Nellie C. Moore has returned to her place at the Exchange after a few weeks' vacation.

Albert Fuchs shipped some big sago palms to the St. Louis exposition yesterday. They are the same plants he exhibited at the Buffalo and Chicago expositions.

A. L. Randall Co. gets Clematis paniculata, which would be thought to be a good seller, but it isn't, not even at a quarter a bunch.

Peter Reinberg is a member of the aldermanic committee to arrange for the Chicago Day celebration at the St. Louis exposition October 8, the anniversary of the great fire.

O. J. Friedman has a good-sized and well equipped store at Thirty-fifth street and Michigan avenue. He is now building a small conservatory in the rear.

Lubliner & Trinz, who have the store on Randolph street above Kennicott's, have opened another store on Jackson boulevard near Dearborn street.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market is beginning to "sit up and take notice." The last of the week found a thorough cleaning up of ice boxes and supplies at some price, which is looked upon as a godsend after the weeks of over-abundance. In the experience of the wholesale trade no such summer has ever been experienced. At times the wholesalers have been practically helpless, but the merchants and the market have wonderful recuperative powers and in a month the long nightmare will be forgotten.

The Jewish holiday was the cleansing event of last week. With the opening of the schools, the frosty air, the coming again of the sidewalk merchants, and the theatre openings and the advent of violets and chrysanthemums, the fall activity will begin. Both wholesalers and retailers are ready for a strenuous season.

The Jewish holidays will continue until next Monday. Nearly a million Jews call New York City their home. They use many flowers but there will be enough to go around. In fact, there are enough asters and gladioli here to keep the million happy daily.

It is too early for violets, though a few have arrived, occasionally good in quality, but generally small, colorless and undesirable. There is a time for everything, but it isn't time for violets nor mums. "Every dog has his day" and so has every variety of flower. The dahlia will rule king from now until frost dethrones it. Grand quality and variety characterizes most of the shipments reaching the New York market.

The orchid demand increases and outside cities are developing a metropolitan appreciation. A large shipment of grand Cattleya gigas was made to a prominent Buffalo house on Thursday. The demand for water lilies has vanished. Fine varieties for a long time realizing $5 per 100 could not be moved on Saturday.

Club Meeting.

The first meeting of the New York Florists' Club for the season was held Monday evening, about fifty members being present and a most enthusiastic session enjoyed, while the exhibit of flowers was one of rare extent and excellence. President Traendly was in the chair.

The outing committee reported a balance on the right side of the ledger. Mr. Sheridan read the resolutions on the death of Frank Traendly, Jr., only son of the president, to which Mr. Traendly feelingly responded. Treasurer Weathered read his report, showing a balance of over $1,200. Henry Reimels, of Woodhaven, was elected a member. The nominating committee appointed by the president is Messrs. Burns, Sheridan, O'Mara, Hafner, Nugent, Miller and Bunyard. The committee of awards, through Chairman O'Mara, spoke in eloquent terms of the splendid exhibition of the evening, expressing the gratitude of the club and appreciation of the enterprise of F. R. Pierson Co., H. A. Dreer, Clucas & Boddington Co., A. L. Miller, Pankok & Schumacher and H. Beaulieu.

The F. R. Pierson Co. had a very large exhibit of phloxes, cannas and dahlias, a whole flower show in itself. A. L. Miller showed dahlias Grandview, Kaiserin Augusta Victoria and Camaeliflora. H. A. Dreer showed twenty-two varieties of hardy perennials. Clucas & Boddington Co. showed ninety varieties of dahlias, also phloxes and other hardy flowers. H. Beaulieu staged about fifty varieties of dahlias. Pankok & Schumacher showed

ANNOUNCEMENT TO THE TRADE

ON OCTOBER 1st, 1904, the undersigned firm will open a first-class Wholesale Jobbing Cut Flower and Florists' Supply Store at 58-60 Wabash Ave., Growers' Exchange. This will fill a long-felt want among the city buyers, inasmuch as we will carry a complete line of up-to-date Florists' Supplies and Requisites. All growers consigning stock to us should bear in mind that we are not strangers to the business by any means, as our Mr. Vaughan's experience extends over sixteen years in travel among the trade, soliciting orders in nearly every branch of the Horticulture and Florists' Supply business. Promptness and integrity of purpose is to be the watch-word in all our business transactions, and we ask growers and buyers alike to give us a fair share of their business and we will "deliver the goods."

Countess of Lonsdale dahlia. At the meeting of the club the second Monday in October, the exhibits will consist of cannas, dahlias and early chrysanthemums. A cordial invitation is extended to all growers to participate.

Considerable time was devoted to reviews of the convention and the World's Fair by those who were at St. Louis and H. Beaulieu was instrumental in having accorded every speaker a vote of thanks. Among those who had interesting experiences and observations to recount were John Scott, Charles Lenker, Theo. Lang, P. O'Mara, H. A. Bunyard, W. J. Stewart, Mr. Abram, of St. Louis, who made the floral clock and was a visitor, and others.

Announcement was made of the formation of the bowling club, fifteen members having already given their names and the first meeting being called at the old alleys, on Twenty-third street and Sixth avenue, the first Friday evening in October.

The Sangerbund Show.

The sixteenth annual exhibition and flower show of the Sangerbund ended at Ridgewood park, Brooklyn, on Sunday, after four days of large attendance. The exhibit of plants and flowers gave opportunity to many prominent local florists for display. John Scott had a fine group of his new fern and received special recognition. A $45 prize for a palm group was won by John Meisem, of Elmhurst, and $35 by Chas. Koch, of Flatbush. Henry Bottjer exhibited vegetables and E. Buckingham, of Brooklyn, seeds and bulbs. Many carpet beds for competition were planted, the prizes going to John Dryer, John Baumann and Emil Miller. For mixed geraniums F. Marquardt, of Middle Village, won first honors; for cannas, A. L. Miller, of Brooklyn, and for cacti, F. Weinberg, of Woodside. The salvia and heliotrope prizes went to Mr. Marquardt. Mr. Miller won the tuberous begonia award. August Schrader lead all competitors for foliage plants. H. Maenner, of Maspeth, was first for coleus.

The management of the show included the well known Long Island florists, Messrs. Koch, Miesem, Schrader, Baumann, Maenner and Marquardt.

Various Notes.

J. E. Lager, of Summit, was in the city Thursday. He announces the cutting of the last of the Cattleya gigas and the advent of C. labiata, of which he will have an abundant supply. One branch of C. gigas at McManus' was on exhibition holding eight perfect flowers readily commanding 75 cents each. Lager & Hurrell will exhibit as usual at all the great fall shows.

Ford Bros. received their first shipment of violets September 3, a box of 2,000 from Walter Pell, of Rhinebeck.

L. K. Peacock, of Atco, N. J., was in the city last week and among other interesting dahlia information told me that his 102 acres this year will produce 1,300,000 roots, that he has over 1,000 named varieties and produces 50,000 to 100,000 seedlings every year, that out of 20,000 only one is considered worthy of saving and that out of 100 excellent new varieties so obtained, not over one is named. All poor ones are destroyed immediately after flowering.

Jos. Fenrich has added electric light to his other facilities and is much pleased with his progress as receiver of good roses and an abundance of them.

A. J. Guttman, of 52 W. Twenty-ninth street, and Chas. Weber, of Lynbrook, L. I., have bought the carnation known as red seedling No. 3 from Jos. Sakowich, of New Hyde Park, L. I., and control the output. The controversy relative to the original ownership of this seedling has been satisfactorily adjusted.

W. H. Gunther reports after a trip among his growers up the Hudson, that several of the "violetists" around Poughkeepsie and Highlands have thrown out violets entirely and are growing carnations, that the violets remaining show a better plant growth than for five years past and that, while last year fifty-six new violet houses were erected not one has been built this season, ensuring a reduction of the over-supply and a more uniform and satisfactory price for growers.

Chas. Millang has stocked his conservatories again with the best the plant market affords and I noticed a liberal space devoted to the new fern, Scottii.

J. Van Kleef, of Boskoop, Holland, is in the city with reference to his American agency and has arranged for its continuance with the C. H. Joosten estate as usual.

Suzuki & Iida have already distributed their big importation of Chinese lilies and have just received their first supply of Japanese callas. The war to date has not interfered with their business in any way. Messrs. Suzuki and Iida are both in Japan at present.

Reed & Keller have been busy men since the convention; never such a demand for supplies in their career as this fall. If their diagnosis of the pulse of trade is correct, a great season may be counted on.

The auctions from now on will be in full blast and the ram's horn will sound no more clarion echo than the voices of the aggressive auctioneers. Elliott begins to-day.

Martin Shonatus, gardener for Payne Whitney, at Great Neck, L. I., reports the loss of valuable and rare plants by vandals last week, over $500 worth being destroyed.

Michael Schultz, of Madison, N. J., died September 8, aged 73. He was the father of the three Schultz boys, prominent rose growers of that town, and the trade extends its sympathy in their bereavement.

Shaw's Garden, in St. Louis, now holds the big plants of Scottii so much admired at the convention and other plants from the convention exhibit are still on exhibition in the Horticulture building at the Fair.

J. K. Allen has a fund of interesting experiences of his European travels with which he delights his friends, but he is quite satisfied to spend his next fifty years under the stars and stripes.

Enterprise is in evidence at Chas. Zeller & Son's, in Flatbush, considerable building now being done and all stock in the houses and out of them in splendid condition for the approaching season. R. Dryer, of Woodside, also shows unlimited faith in the future and is adding constantly to his plant.

William Ghormley is back from his outing at Dansville, N. Y., and J. H. Troy has returned from Europe.

Henry Hentz, of Madison, has added the Tilden greenhouses to his extensive plant, which means more special rose shipments than ever this season. John Nash, of this house, has just completed his annual tour among the Jersey rose growers.

John Burton, of Philadelphia, and J. L. Dillon, of Bloomsburg, were among the week's visitors.

J. B. Nugent, Sr., one of the veterans of the business and 82 years of age is reported seriously ill.

J. Austin Shaw.

Columbus, Ind.—Chas. S. Barnaby found trade so good last season that he is adding two houses 23x100 feet for the purpose of increasing his facilities.

The Judges at the Convention in St. Louis awarded the Society's Silver Medal, the highest award of that Society.

This fern also received the highest award from the Canadian Horticultural Association at Ottawa Convention—"A Certificate of Merit." The correspondent of The Florists' Exchange said: "It is a regular beauty, and a revelation to those who had only seen this fern in the small stages." Awarded S. A. F. O. H. Silver Medal at the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society's Spring Exhibition in Philadelphia, March 24, 1904. Awarded a Diploma by the American Institute, and also received the New York Florists' Club's Highest Award—"A Certificate of Merit."

MR. JOHN SCOTT.

Dear Sir:—I desire to express to you my very sincere appreciation of the magnificent exhibit of Scottii made at St. Louis. It was certainly one of the finest displays ever made at any S. A. F. Convention. Scottii is without a doubt the finest commercial Nephrolepis ever offered to the trade. The lot that you shipped me in June has more than fulfilled all that you claimed for it. Find enclosed my order for some of the larger sizes.

I predict it the most valuable Nephrolepis in existence to-day. PHILIP BREITMEYER.

MR. JOHN SCOTT, Keap Street Greenhouses, Borough of Brooklyn, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Scott:—Your exhibit of the Nephrolepis Scottii at the recent S. A. F. Convention in St, Louis was so far superior to anything that I have seen at the conventions, that I wish to congratulate you upon the success you have attained in bringing within reach of all plant lovers, one of the most beautiful and useful of all ferns now in the market.

I predict for it a great future.

Believe me, sir, to be,

Yours very truly, WM. F. GUDE.

MR. JOHN SCOTT, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Scott:—The twelve (12) specimen Nephrolepis Scottii in 14-inch tubs were received in perfect condition. They are without exception the most beautiful Nephrolepis I have ever seen.

My customers are delighted with them.

Yours truly, J. H. TROY.

R. DREYER, Florist.

Woodside, Long Island.

MR. JOHN SCOTT.

Dear Sir:—The 1000 Scottii Runners that you sold me in June have more than fulfilled all you claimed for them—it is the finest commercial fern ever introduced and it will positively take the place of the Boston fern. Anyone visiting here will be convinced that Scottii is all that we claim for it, when they see it. HERMAN DREYER.

DAVID CLARKE'S SONS, New York, say: "We have tried all the new introductions of Nephrolepis and in N. Scottii are certain we have at last found the ideal."

J. M. HODGSON, Florist, (Inc.), Newport, says: "Scottii is far better than the Boston in all sizes and will certainly take its place. We have tried all the other introductions, but fail to find them satisfactory for our class of trade."

H. A. DREER says: "It is the new Boston fern that has come to stay."

NEPHROLEPIS SCOTTII makes three times as many fronds as Boston in a given time. Fronds are always in proportion to size of plant. Plants are dense and bushy in all sizes.

IT IS THE MOST GRACEFUL AND SYMMETRICAL NEPHROLEPIS KNOWN.

SCOTTII is as far ahead of Boston, as the Boston was ahead of all other introductions. Visit my greenhouses and you will surely be convinced that I have the finest lot of ferns, in all sizes, ever seen in the United States.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex. Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

C. W. CARMAN has determined to remove his nursery business from Lawrence, Kan., to Fort Madison, Ia.

HEAD the peach trees low. That is, let them sprout out near the ground and make several trunks instead of one only. This advice is specially applicable to the northern edge of the peach belt.

IN planting his first Georgia peach orchard, J. H. Hale set his trees fifteen feet apart, but this proved too close. The later orchards, composed of Thurber, Waddell, Carmen, Hiley, Belle and Elberta, have been set twenty feet apart.

THE Tamarix Africana seems likely to find a large use as a box edging through its successful employment by the landscape department at the St. Louis World's Fair. It grows to considerable height, but by hard cutting back it may be kept quite low.

AN unusual feature, sure to attract attention on any lawn, is that form of the sumach known from its peculiar flower effect as the smoke tree or mist shrub. It is Rhus Cotinus. In the fall it makes a fine foliage effect.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Among the out-of-town nurserymen who were in the city to attend the funeral of J. C. Blair, of Blair & Kaufman, were E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; L. R. Taylor, Topeka; E. J. Holman and Col. U. B. Pearsall, Leavenworth, and A. Miller, Ottawa.

FORSYTHIA EUROPAEA.

John Charlton & Son, Rochester, N. Y., write as follows:

"In the Gardeners' Chronicle of January 16, attention is called to Forsythia Europæa, saying that it has been in the Berlin Botanic Garden for several years, but that it has not yet bloomed. We have the plant in our nursery, and have without doubt the first plant of its variety to bloom in America. So far, we have only heard of its existence in one or two places. We, in common with others, did not know of the existence of an European species until a recent period, and wonder how it could have escaped the attention of botanists so long.

"The late Mr. Thompson, of Ipswich, offered seeds of it four years ago, from which our plants were produced, and he only offered the seeds one season. This shrub is a good compact grower, of an upright habit, with no procumbent or drooping branches. Its flowers are about the same size as those of Forsythia suspensa, but are of a lighter shade of sulphur-yellow color, the flower stems are shorter or the flowers nearly sessile; and we should think when the plants attain age they would become very attractive. In foliage it is similar to F. suspensa, but the habit, as stated above, is very distinct from that variety. Forsythia suspensa is the finest early blooming shrub we possess here, forming when in bloom glorious drooping bushes of deep golden-yellow, which are very showy and most attractive."

WATER AND STEAM.

In arranging my heating for my greenhouse for the coming winter I want to use water for mild weather and steam for cold. Now the point that is bothering me is whether I should put a check valve on the return? My boiler is two feet below the returns. J. Q. M.

A check valve should not be used on the return, as the weight of the check will retard the flow of water when running with hot water. If it is desirable to use valves at all, they should be those known as "gate" valves, which can be opened or closed at will and allow a straight course for the passage of the water. L. C. C.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

THE Japanese longiflorums are in on time.

THE California crop of beans is now reported as very seriously injured.

IF nothing unfavorable occurs from now on good deliveries of green podded beans may be expected.

S. B. DICKS, representing Cooper, Taber & Co., London, Eng., returns to Chicago from the northwest September 15.

C. S. CLARK, Wakeman, O., says that he cannot see anything which would indicate a surplus of sweet corn for this season.

J. W. BEBUS, formerly with Wm. Elliott & Sons, New York, has gone into the bulb and plant business at 120 Liberty street, New York.

THE pea growers are beginning to receive the year's crop from the farmers and definite news of how the crops have turned out will soon be made known.

IT is stated that the melon land in the vicinity of Rocky Ford, Colorado, is losing its virtue as a peculiarly favorable soil for insuring quality in the cantaloupes that are raised there in such quantity.

AT the time of going to press frost is reported from Nebraska vine, seed and sweet corn belt. It is not known yet what effect this may have on the crops but it is feared that considerable damage has been done.

LONG ISLAND SEED CROPS.

J. M. Lupton writes: "Our seed crops this season have not given us average yields as a rule. Spinach produced about one-third of a crop and contract deliveries were short. Siberian kale was about half a crop. Curled Scotch kale was nearly all killed by the winter and but little seed was produced. It was the same with Brussels sprouts. Some varieties of cabbage are sufficient for the demand, but the crop is very short on a number of the second early sorts; on several of them only forty per cent deliveries seem quite probable at this date, September 6."

CONNECTICUT SEED CROP.

The Everett B. Clark Co., Milford, Conn., writes September 8: "Our crops of turnip, parsnip, beet and onion have all been harvested and are all good average crops, yield and quality good. Carrot is very poor and sweet corn has ripened down considerably the past two weeks, but is not a large yield."

EASTERN SEED CROPS.

The D. Landreth Seed Co. writes that "in the east the seed crops so far harvested of such families as cabbage, kale, turnip, radish and spinach have been very deficient in product on account of too much rain and too low a temperature.

"The seed crops not yet harvested, consisting of pepper, egg plant, melon and cucumber, are doing poorly for the same reason, growing too much to leaf and producing very little fruit.

"The acreage in onion sets in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware was curtailed to almost nothing, the result of an indisposition to pursue the culture on account of low prices. The crop, even on a reduced acreage, has been unsatisfactory this year in the yield, but there are indications of better prices being obtainable. Field corn looks well, but is very tall and late."

GEORGIA SEED CROPS.

Mark W. Johnson, Atlanta, Ga., writes that "seed crops in our growing territory are encouraging. Most crops will fall below an average. Cucumber about fifty per cent; early corn about seventy-five per cent; squash and pumpkin fifty per cent; Rattlesnake watermelon very short, other varieties seventy per cent; okra sixty per cent; Giant Curled mustard and Seven Top turnips seventy-five per cent; Georgia collard seventy per cent. Field crops so far are unusually fine, corn and cow peas 100 per cent. Rains are, however, too copious now and unless they cease soon these crops will be damaged. Successive years of short garden seed crops create the belief in the minds of our farmers that seed growers have cornered the business in order to obtain exorbitant prices, an unfortunate condition."

CALIFORNIA SEED CROPS.

C. C. Morse & Co., Santa Clara, Cal., write under date of September 8:

"We expect to fill practically all of our garden seed orders in full, with the possible exception of a few varieties of white radish and possibly some tomato shortages. Onion is again a full crop, but the total acreage, we believe, is considerably less than that of last year and the average yield is probably not quite so good. This, we believe, has a tendency to reduce surplus somewhat. This has been a decidedly unfavorable season for tomato crop, the summer having been far too cool, but with the extremely warm weather we are having at present it should hasten the ripening of fruit and may yet turn out all right. Sweet peas did not turn out very well, and we had quite a number of shortages on named varieties, as well as on mixtures. Other flower seeds, such as asters, verbenas, poppies, mignonette and cosmos, are all looking well and promise a full crop."

NEBRASKA SEED CROPS.

Frank T. Emerson, of the Western Seed and Irrigation Co., Fremont, Neb., writes as follows, September 7:

"The past season in Nebraska has been exceedingly unfavorable for corn, both sweet and field varieties, owing to almost constant wet weather. In the months of June and July we had but twelve days that permitted field cultivation. Crops, therefore, have been produced under unusually unfavorable conditions and are at least three weeks later than usual in reaching maturity. Late varieties at present writing are by no means in a condition to warrant surety against frost and will not generally be safe until the last week of September.

"Vine seed crops, viz., cucumber, muskmelon, squash, pumpkin, etc., promised a liberal yield until about the middle of August, when a period of generally dry weather began, accompanied with warm days, quite hot winds and cold nights, checking growth of vines and fruit and materially reducing prospective yield of seed.

"In our opinion the crop of vine seeds in general, estimated the middle of August, will fall short at least fifty per cent, and in some instances even more, depending upon weather conditions, during the next fifteen to twenty days."

MEALY BUG ON BOSTONS.

Please tell me of a good solution or other method of getting rid of mealy bugs on Boston ferns. J. C.

Fumigating with aphis punk is one of the safest and best remedies for mealy bug on Boston ferns, this preparation being entirely harmless to the ferns when used according to directions. The directions given by the makers of the punk suggest the use of three rolls of the preparation to a greenhouse 20x100 feet in area, but I have used double that quantity without injury to the plants. The fumigation should be given in the evening and preferably when the weather is cloudy and damp, as the smoke stays in the house much longer under such conditions, and two or three smokings on successive evenings may be needed to make a clearance of the insects. W. H. Taplin.

VENTILATION.

I am planning the erection of another greenhouse and would like some information with regard to ventilation. I notice that most of the larger places in the west, as illustrated from time to time in the REVIEW, use alternating ventilators on each side of the ridge while some use continuous ventilation on one side only. What is the idea? Does one get better ventilation by using the alternating rather than the continuous sash?

A. H. D.

The alternating style of ventilation, as shown in the illustration of the United States Cut Flower Company's plant at Elmira, N. Y., published August 25, is considered by experts to be the ideal and is now used by most modern builders. The advantages obtained by this system over continuous ventilation are, first, that during continued damp weather the expansion of the ventilator sash does not interfere with its closing tightly; second, during high winds the resistance is reduced to a minimum, at the same time affording quite as free an access to fresh air. Another very valuable advantage lies in the fact that ventilation can be readily alternated to suit either a north or south wind. There is very little difference in the cost of construction, but the difference in cost of maintenance is decidedly in favor of the alternating method.

The Florists' Manual

Is a book that you need in your business.

If you haven't a copy already, order one now.

THEY SAY that October now rivals June as a month for weddings.

Have you the ribbons, the RIGHT RIBBONS that you need for the decorations and for the flowers carried by the bride and bridesmaids?

Know that we weave ribbons, narrow and wide, of satin, of taffeta, of gauze; and all with that distinctiveness that stamps PINE TREE RIBBONS as the RIGHT RIBBONS for Florists to use.

And yet — the prices are less than cheaper qualities sold elsewhere, because — when buying from the mill, "YOU SAVE ALL BETWEEN PROFITS."

The Pine Tree Silk Mills Company
Philadelphia

Ribbons are sold in any desired quantity from a 10-yard piece upwards. Write for samples and compare with the ribbons you now use. The prices and qualities will be convincing. These are our special grades. In all widths.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Trade is very much the same as reported last week, with the supply of stock somewhat larger. Beauties especially are in large supply and they are of good quality also. Other roses are not very plentiful, except very short-stemmed ones. Some good Chatenay are coming in. Dudley, of Parkersburg, W. Va., sends some nice blooms of this rose.

Asters are reduced in quantity every day and the end seems to be in sight. Those to be had come from the north and are of fine quality. Carnations are still scarce, there being scarcely any. Gladioli are not very plentiful. There has been a good demand for lilies and valley and very little supply to take care of it. Long, fine dahlias that sell well are coming to E. G. Gillett from the Cushman Co. This firm is also sending some fine gladioli.

Jewish New Year's brought forth a lively demand for stock last Friday and Saturday and most of the commission houses were cleared out early in the day.

Various Notes.

Julius Baer has received notice to vacate his present quarters within a year, as the building will be torn down. There are four retail stores on Fourth street between Walnut and Main, all of which are in rather old buildings that will soon be raized to make way for modern structures. This will make it necessary for these florists to find new quarters and, as this block now constitutes the main retail cut flower district of the city, it will bring about a shifting of retail stores that will be watched with considerable interest. But after all it is the man who handles the best quality of flowers, who treats his customers well and who does not overcharge them who gets the trade. The matter of location is not the first consideration in a first-class flower store.

Grasshoppers have been causing considerable damage to carnation plants lately and others report trouble with thrips.

Wm. Murphy has just returned from his trip to Snow Islands. He is looking very well and reports fishing very good.

J. T. Conger has gone to Cleveland to attend the convention of the J. O. A. M.

Fred Gear had two large wagonloads of floral designs for the funeral of Judge Nipert, besides a third wagonload for another funeral.

Chas. Pommert was in the city Monday. He is sending in some fine green goods. He reports the goldfish crop as very large this year.

E. Ostemdorf is receiving congratulations. It is a fine boy and looks just like papa.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society was held last Saturday. The main topic for discussion was our flower shows. It was finally decided to revise the schedules and rules somewhat and to give three shows, the first being a chrysanthemum show, to be held the second Saturday in November. A committee consisting of R. Witterstaetter, Wm. Murphy, Geo. Murphy, Wm. Rodgers and Ben George was appointed to make the necessary arrangements and see to raising the money for prizes. The committee will meet next Sunday afternoon at R. Witterstaetter's home to commence work. Our flower shows have been the mainstay of our society and it is to be hoped that everyone will enter into them with as much spirit this year as they have been accustomed to in the past.

Chas. Brunner and brother have just returned from the World's Fair.

Mr. Fancourt, of Philadelphia, was a visitor, as was Robt. Buck, of Greenfield, O.

C. J. OHMER.

ALEDO, ILL.—Charles McChesney put his place in good shape and then went to his old home at Burlington, Ia., for a rest. He looks for a good season.

MANCHESTER, N. H.—Freeman M. Smith, who is conducting the old Neal greenhouses, has torn them down and rebuilt them in good shape on land recently purchased of R. G. Sawyer.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

It registers 98 degrees in the shade and the effect of this is to bring the balance of the aster crop into town with a rush and from present indications we will not have them much longer with us. The chrysanthemums are being brought on in a hurry and it will be only a few days until we are swamped by them. We have had indoor mums for several weeks and they have been very fair sellers. They cost the stores on an average of from $2 to $2.50 per dozen. Roses have a very shabby appearance and it will be some weeks before they are normal. Maids are about the best, with a few good Brides here and there. The weather does not favor Beauties and they are very poor. Carnations are in good demand and of only fair quality. A great many of our larger growers are still changing their houses and it makes this rather an off season for blooms. Violets are a little more plentiful. The weather has been so warm that it is almost impossible to keep them in good selling shape over a few hours. Business has only been fair, notwithstanding that we have had many thousands of visitors in town.

Various Notes.

The Alcazar florists have given up the store in the Alcazar Theatre building.

Thos. H. Stevenson has been using large baskets of assorted fruits to good advantage in decorating his windows in the Palace hotel during the Knights Templar conclave.

The show of flowers kept on exhibition at Sievers & Boland's Post street store has rarely been equaled in San Francisco and is a splendid advertisement for California and for this enterprising firm.

Misses Wallenberg & Montpelier report that their prospects for decorating during the coming season are very good. They have two large house decorations for next week.

H. Plath, of Ocean View, is erecting a fern house 25x80 feet. This is the thirteenth house devoted to ferns, palms and smilax, of which Mr. Plath has one of the largest assortments on the coast.

The Society Hortensia will give a flower show in Oakland this week.

W. V. Eberly is at present acting as manager for the California Nursery Co., at Niles; the position was made vacant by the death of the late John Rock. G.

A NEW PARASITE.

One of the most important discoveries that has ever been made for the benefit of horticulture is announced. The parasite that destroys the codlin moth has been found in South America, by George Compere, who is employed jointly by the State of California, through Horticultural Commissioner Cooper, and by West Australia. The genuineness of the discovery is vouched for by the fact that the apple orchards that are the habitat of the newly found parasite bring ninety-five per cent of their fruit to maturity. In California, as well as other countries, the product of the world's apple and pear orchards has not been more than thirty-five to forty per cent of the promise at setting.

The codlin moth is to be found wherever these fruits are grown. This insect causes apples and pears to be wormy and drop prematurely from the trees and within the last ten years it has fully identified itself with our entire orchard country. It is said that wherever the codlin moth lives, the codlin moth parasite will also thrive, regardless of extremes of temperature. Consequently the discovery becomes at once of world-wide importance. The first of the codlin moth parasites will probably reach San Francisco before the expiration of the present year, when the work of multiplying them will at once be prosecuted. G.

MILWAUKEE.

Death o Frank Whitnall.

Frank Whitnall, a pioneer resident of Milwaukee, died September 10 at the residence of his son, C. B. Whitnall, aged 74 years. Mr. Whitnall was born at Leeds, England, in 1830. He came to the United States when a boy of 16 years, making his way alone to Milwaukee, where his brother, William, had preceded him. Later Frank Whitnall studied botany at Oberlin College and purchased five acres of land along the Milwaukee river, the property on Humboldt avenue being now known as the Whitnall homestead. He subjected many native wild flowers to cultivation and improved them greatly. Later his son, C. B. Whitnall, took up the business and conducted it for many years. Mr. Whitnall is survived by his wife, their son, two brothers and one sister. For several years Mr. Whitnall resided in Los Angeles, but returned to Milwaukee recently, feeling that his illness was fatal.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.

At a regular monthly meeting of the Tri-City Florists' Club, held September 8, at Henry Gaethje's greenhouse in South Rock Island, the members decided to have the organization incorporated. John Temple, of Davenport, was appointed a committee of one to have charge of the preliminary arrangements.

The members listened to two very interesting and instructive talks during the evening. "The Humorous Side of a Florist's Life" was described in an amusing manner by Harry Bills. Emil Boehn talked of "Cyclamens" and brought out many valuable points. The delegates to the national convention in St. Louis also made their report. The next regular session of the club will be held in Moline on the second Thursday in October. At this meeting addresses will be made by George Forber and Theodore Ewoldt. Light refreshments were served after the business of the evening had been concluded.

FAIRBURY, ILL.—Kring Bros. are doing a nice business in field-grown carnation plants, their largest shipment having been to a buyer in New York.

QUINCY, MASS.—Malcom Orr has bought the Miller place in North Saugus and has the houses planted to double violets and chrysanthemums, all looking fine, especially the violets, of which he is a first-class grower. Mr. Orr will sell his cut at the new market in Boston.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Business has not improved since my last writing and we have had no rain. Carnations are about all housed, with the exception of a few which are not quite ready yet.

The Kentucky Society of Florists held its monthly meeting on September 6, at C. W. Reimers' place on Hite avenue. A very large attendance was on hand and lots of business was transacted. President Jacob Schulz called the meeting to order at 3 o'clock. The object of this meeting was to consider prices on all bedding plants in 4-inch pots. Quite a lively discussion took place and after a long, hard struggle it was agreed that prices be advanced. After the meeting adjourned the members were invited to a beautiful spread which was served by C. W. Reimers and all sat down and did justice to it. Jos. Coenen acted as toastmaster and did it well. Messrs. Bohrman and Kirch gave some of their popular songs, which were cheered by all. A vote of thanks was extended to Mr. Reimers by the society. The polite foreman, Mr. Koenig, showed the members through the different departments and everything was in fine shape. His chrysanthemums, carnations, poinsettias, tea roses and American Beauties are all growing in fine order.

H. Litchtefeld.

Lansdowne, Pa.—Thieves raided the greenhouses of J. Leonard and secured about $200 worth of tools and fittings. The same evening they were interrupted in the neighboring greenhouse of Mrs. Archibald Anderson.

Maryville, Mo.—P. Mergen & Co. report very satisfactory business this summer and prospects for good fall trade. Cut flower business is better than at this time last year.

TESTIMONIAL.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 21, 1904.
Messrs. BAUR & SMITH, Indianapolis, Ind.

DEAR SIRS:—In reply to yours of the 15th would say that I am very much impressed with your new Carnation Indianapolis as a first-class commercial variety. The color, formand stem are all that could be desired, and every shoot runs up into flower. From the limited number of plants I have had I am well pleased with the production, and I know that all who invest in it will be pleased with it.

Yours truly,
JOHN A. MACRAE.

We have about 5000 fine Field-Grown Plants to sell this Fall at $12 per 100; $100 per 1000. First come, first served.

SHIPPING ASPARAGUS PLANTS.

How should potted asparagus plants be packed to send by express?

I. E. B.

At this season of the year little or no wrapping in paper is required in packing plants for shipment by express, but if packed in pots they need a good layer of excelsior between each row of plants, and then a wooden strip or cleat firmly nailed in order to keep the plants from shifting.

If the plants are small, that is, any size up to 3-inch pots, I should prefer to lay them on their sides in regular layers in the ends of a box, the pots being separated from each other by a small wad of excelsior, and then to fasten each layer in place with a narrow strip, a sufficient quantity of excelsior being laid along the front of the pots to act as a cushion between the latter and the wooden strip.

With larger sized pots it would be better to cover the floor of the box with about an inch or two of excelsior, then stand the pots upon it in regular rows, making all tight with the packing material, and then nailing the strips between the rows to keep the plants secure, the box being finished with a crate cover.

In frosty weather it would be necessary to wrap the plants in several thicknesses of paper, fasten them in the box as before, and then finish with a tight cover, the entire box having been well lined with a good layer of paper on the bottom, top, sides and ends.

Packing plants in pots adds very greatly to the weight and bulk of the package, besides being much more risky on account of possible breakage, and should therefore be avoided as much as possible in making express shipments.

...FALL... BARGAINS!

We wish to call your attention to the following low quotations, considering the quality, which we guarantee as represented:

CHINESE PRIMROSES—From the very best European strains. We have always given satisfaction with these, and a trial order will convince. Thrifty plants, ready for a shift, from 2¼-inch pots, in white, light pink, blue and bright red, $3.00 per 100; from 3-inch pots, in above colors, $5.00 per 100.

PRIMULA FORBESII GRANDIFLORA—A large flowered type of Forbesii, much stronger in growth, longer stemmed and flowers double the usual size. From 2¼-inch pots, $3 00 per 100.

NEPHROLEPIS BOSTONIENSIS—Thrifty plants of this favorite fern that have had a full season's growth, and a bargain to any Florist. From 2¼-inch pots, $4.00 per 100; 2½-inch pots, $6.00 per 100; 3-inch pots, $8.00.

NEPHROLEPIS PIERSONI—Plants from 2¼-inch pots of same quality as Bostons, $4.00 per 100.

NEPHROLEPIS CORDATA COMPACTA—Thrifty plants of this old-time favorite, from 2¼-inch pots, $4.00 per 100; 2½-inch pots, $6.00 per 100; 3-inch pots, $8.00 per 100.

POINSETTIA PULCHERRIMA—Vigorous plants from late struck cuttings, ready for shift. From 2½-inch pots, $5.00 per 100.

PIPING A RANGE.

We have nearly completed four houses running north and south, three fifteen feet wide and one sixteen. We wish to maintain at least 55 degrees when the thermometer is zero in three of them and 65 degrees in the other one at that temperature. The ridge is thirteen feet from the ground; glass is eight to nine feet at ends and two feet at east and west sides. The walls are 2-inch planking and one inch rustic with tar paper between. The houses are built on a side hill and are all connected by gutters, with a partition separating the sixteen-foot house from the others. The house on the west is five feet higher than the boiler house, which is located at the southeast corner of the houses. Therefore we feel we will have to make the far end of the flows the highest point. We have a Scotch-marine 50 horse-power boiler and want to use hot water. We have several thousand 3-inch tubing on hand and prefer that because it is cheapest. B. F. C.

To maintain a temperature of 55 degrees in zero weather in the three houses fifteen feet wide without partitions between will require in all eighten lines of 3-inch pipe. If your houses run along the side of the hill, it will be necessary to place nine lines in the lower house, five in the second, and four in the upper one, as the heated air will rise. If the houses run up and down the hillside, there should be eight lines in the outside house and five in each of the others. The house sixteen feet wide will require eight lines of pipe to maintain a temperature of 65 degrees, one flow and seven returns, four of which should be under the outside bench. One flow pipe will be sufficient in each house and the end farthest from the boiler can be the highest point, but must be provided with an air vent. L. C. C.

NAPERVILLE, ILL.—Jacob Rohr & Son have about doubled their glass this summer and will grow carnations as well as bedding plants for the cemetery trade. Business is steadily increasing with them.

Anton F. Schramm died September 4 at his home, 2476 Cherry street. Death was caused by hemorrhage of the lungs. The deceased was 40 years of age. He leaves a wife and five children, the eldest a daughter of 18. He was born in this city and lived here all his life. He was engaged in the florists' business with the elder Schramm until three years ago, when he started a greenhouse of his own on Cherry street.

PIPING.

We have a house 16x40, three-quarter span to the southwest, fourteen inches glass on side and glass in south end, ten feet to ridge. We want to heat this with hot water, using a 3½-inch flow and 2-inch returns. How shall we pipe it? The center bed is solid. M. & H.

To maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in zero weather will require the use of eight 2-inch return pipes, four under each bench, in addition to one 3½-inch flow pipe. L. C. C.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Beware the First Frost.

We have such wide climatic differences in this country that frost may be expected in North Dakota perhaps ere this. It may hold off until the middle of November in Maryland and never assail the orange groves of Florida during the whole winter. In the North Atlantic states, northern New York and what we call the middle west, we can look pretty surely for a slight frost during the early days of October. No matter how "beautiful" October may be, and it is a glorious month, generally a frost the first week has ruined our gardens and to the careless florist it has done worse than that; it has ruined many plants that he should have had under glass. From now on for the next three weeks is a hustling time.

Stevia Serrata.

That common cheap plant, Stevia serrata, is indispensable. Our best customers ask continually for "that light, feathery flower." They should be lifted and potted into 6-inch or 7-inch pots, but still left outdoors. This plant is in one respect like the cineraria: It will thrive in the greenhouse at a temperature of 40°, yet 2° of frost will curl it up. So have them in a position where they can be protected against a slight early frost and when it is gone they are far better outdoors for another month. The plants are stouter and better in every way outdoors than under glass and, as it is at the holidays when it is in greatest demand, it will come too early if given glass protection before the end of October. If your plants have been pinched within three or four weeks no more stopping should be done.

Azalea Indica.

Plants that have been summered over and plunged outside we consider nowadays our best plants for Easter. Just let me mention here that it would seem reasonable to suppose that these plants would be the most available to force for Christmas sales. But it has been proved by numerous growers that they are not. The newly imported plants are the ones to force for Christmas; that is, some varieties. The plants that you have carried over in pots during summer should be reserved for Easter. These azaleas will stand about 1° or 2° of frost, but more would hurt them, and as there is no object in keeping them out until danger of frost, get them into the house.

A light, bright house is not at all necessary. A deep cold frame would do them finely until severe weather sets in. They have matured their growth, set their buds and will be about dormant until the buds begin to expand in the spring. So a low temperature is the great essential and, as Easter is very late, a house where you could keep them down to 40° will suit them well during the dark days of winter. I will have something to say about the new importations a week later.

The bottle brush, Acacia armata and any cool hard-wooded plants that you have had outside need the same treatment as the azalea. They want to be cool until it is time to give them heat to bring them into flower.

Hydrangeas.

In our locality the hydrangea is by no means as important an Easter plant as five or six others, nor has it the importance our friend Mr. Peterson attaches to it. Yet when well flowered they are very decorative. A few growers plant them out. The majority of successful growers keep them entirely in pots. Don't be alarmed about a slight frost on them. A light frost ripens the wood and puts them in better condition to submit to two months' rest, which is essential before starting them into growth. If you planted your young plants out in the spring, you can lift them at once, but they should be left outdoors as long as possible, to mature and ripen the growth.

Growers of Easter plants of several kinds should be well supplied with cold frames and sash to cover them in case of frost. Azaleas, stevias and these hydrangeas would be better there until the middle of November and by that time many of your chrysanthemum benches will be thrown out and you then have plenty of room for these plants and others.

Rambler Roses.

We have induced our very near blood relations to grow some Crimson Ramblers on what I believe is the surest method and several times in my notes they have been referred to. They now have canes seven or eight feet long. The plants have been standing on boards outdoors in the sun for the past three or four weeks. The boards are important because we don't want them to root through. They have made growth enough. Don't let them suffer for water. The colder weather and frosts will ripen the wood. Yet there is a time coming, and that's in October, when they want careful watching. If we should get a warm spell with copious rains, the strong eyes on the canes may break into growth, and that's decidedly a pity. Lay them on their sides when rains occur during October. What you want is a gradual ripening, and when November comes there is no longer fear of any eye breaking.

When zero approaches lay them down in a cold frame and protect with evergreen boughs or shutters. Don't make the mistake of putting these hardy roses to rest with their roots dust dry. Many a hardy plant has been killed by severe freezing, because the roots were dry. Nurserymen like to see their trees and shrubs enter the winter with the soil wet and that's a lesson for us. A dry October and November, and then a sudden freeze up, is often disastrous to our orchards and ornamental trees and shrubs. And so the moral of all this is, while leafless and at rest these hardy roses must be moist at the root if exposed to hard frosts.

Begonia Lorraine.

Now is a good time to give these beautiful plants their last shift. Supposing they are in 4-inch pots, then give them 6-inch. If in 3-inch a 5-inch will do and that size of plants is in good demand. Pans or baskets can be made up later, when plants of a uniform size can be chosen. It is from now on for the next two months that this popular plant makes its most rapid and strongest growth. If grown in a north and south house no more shade is needed and if in an east and west house shade only for a few hours in the middle of the day.

Any permanent shade you may have during summer should be removed, and that will apply to almost all plants. As far as the strength or influence of the sun's rays at this season, the first of October is about as the sun would shine on us on March 13 or 14, and who thinks of shading so early as that? If I am wrong in this, it's because I am only a one-horse astronomer.

There is another commercial begonia which I think it will not be far wrong to call B. incarnata grandiflora. It used to be largely grown, and is still worth it, for cut flowers in January and February, but too often cut when soft and immature. Many have not grown it lately, because it gets diseased with a rust. The cause of that is too much shade in summer and fall. It will do plunged outdoors in the broad sun. If you still grow it, now give it the brightest bench you can.

Lifting Stock Plants.

There are several important bedding plants that it is a waste of room to propagate now. A few plants lifted and potted will later give you all the cuttings you require for your spring stock. Among these are acalyphas of several kinds, ageratum, lobelia, feverfew, the glorious Salvia splendens and others that will lift. I don't say all these should be lifted right away, but as you only want a few of each, they will not be missed from the garden and you won't be all in a fluster on the eve of Jack's first visit.

Not one inch of your propagating bench should be vacant just now if you are a bedding plant grower and at once should go in large batches of the ivy geraniums, the scented and tricolor varieties, the variegated and green vinca (by green I mean what is properly known as Harrisonii and which is quite as valuable for vases and veranda boxes as the variegated), the Abutilon vexillarium, a few cuttings of lophospermum, in fact any bedding plants that cannot be lifted easily and of which you want a large quantity.

Tulips are arriving. If you want to cut some soon after Christmas, get 1,000 of such good variety boxed at once. The main crop can wait a few weeks.

ROSES.

Foresight as to Soil.

Growers who are alive to their best interests will now begin to store their soil and manure for winter and spring requirements. This material is now in the most fit state for storing that we can expect and if the storing is delayed till the cold fall rains have had time to saturate it the best properties will be washed out.

A most essential adjunct to every growing establishment is a well built soil shed. This shed should be built on ground a little above the common level and be amply provided with drainage. The roof should be entirely water tight, so that no drip can reach either soil or manure. The side walls should be open enough to admit fresh air and some provision should be made to exclude frost.

After the plants have consumed the elements contained in the soil in the bench and watering has to be given more guardedly they are deprived of the best part of their sustenance and this must be supplied in some form from week to week.

The careful grower will, before the winter has commenced, have a store of material which he can draw upon to supply food for his stock as often as required. This supply of food can be easily and safely administered, even during the shortest days, in the form of a light mulch, which should be prepared while soil and manure are in that fine, mellow condition so easily distinguished from hard, cakey, or sodden soil.

A compost of two parts decomposed cow manure to one of good fibrous sod, thoroughly incorporated and passed through an inch screen or a fine sod crusher, will make it fine enough for use. Just before putting it on the bench we usually add to each bushel of mulch a 5-inch pot of dessicated bone meal and, after carefully watching results, are satisfied that this is about the right proportion for mulches not exceeding an inch in depth.

How pleasant and handy to be able during the cold days of January, when our first batch of cuttings are ready to pot, to be able to place on the potting bench some fine, mellow, warm soil, soil which we are not afraid will chill the tender young roots instead of having to bring it in in a frozen condition and await patiently for it to thaw and dry out.

By a little foresight now we can save many anxious hours of worry during the long winter days, besides having the soil in the proper condition, which contributes so much toward the successful raising of young stock.

As the nutritive qualities of soils and manures and their action upon stock at different stages of their growth should be part of the stock in trade of every grower, old and young, I will in the near future make this the subject of a short treatise. Ribes.

BEGINNINGS IN DESIGN...

A PALETTE ON AN EASEL.

Emblematic Designs.

Before entering upon the discussion of this design, it might be well to speak briefly of the selection and adaptation to floral execution of the best parts of badges, emblems, buttons, etc. Many designs of this kind, good enough in jewelry, are too complex to reduce to a good average-sized piece in flowers. For instance, the one from which the palette before us today was chosen, was a round button with a blue background, white palette and brushes in the center, under which was a scarlet panel with the word "Iowa." Above the palette were the initials "P. A. of." The palette was of white enamel with splashes of paint around the edge of the wide part, just as an artist arranges them for his color work, the purple first, then the red, pink and yellow following a line around the edge. The brushes were drawn through the thumb hole. The whole design was too elaborate for reproduction in flowers except in a very large piece, and besides, the scarlets and purples in flowers can never neighbor with a good grace. The question, therefore, to be decided first was as to what part should be selected, and what part or parts ignored. The part to be reproduced is that which signifies the most, of course, which in this case was the palette with the brushes. The remainder was simply a background for palette and lettering, and at the same time a good excuse for getting rid of objectionable coloring. Choosing the significant part, therefore, we proceed to give it a free interpretation, as it were, by adding an easel and trimming. The badge described above was that of an art association.

Filling and Stemming.

After lining the palette frame with ferns, filling with sphagnum and wrapping as for other designs, cover the frame with the background flowers. It should have been stated above that the design frame ought to be shallow, as an easel is thin wood. Stem the asters on three-quarters picks and insert as flatly as possible against the moss. Cover the shallow edges with small asters. In stemming asters, place the blunt end of the pick up close against the base of the flower, and wrap as tightly as the stems will stand without being cut by the wire. In other designs it is well to stem asters and chrysanthemums on whole picks, by setting the upper point of the pick up into the solid center of the flower from below, to secure the flower in case the soft stem should snap at the top. Afterwards wrap as above.

Smooth Surface and Outline.

The background here is of white, top and edges the same without any green. In any design with no more of a distinct form than this never obscure the outline with a green edge. If you are going to make a design, make it. In plain English, outline it strictly with a uniform material, be positive; then get in your art in free and abundant trimming. In neither coloring nor filling allow the distinctness and character of your design to be obscured. The only exception to this rule which comes to mind now, is the wreath, in both construction and trimming of which you may give loose rein to your inclinations for untamed freedom and wild grace.

Smooth the surface of the palette by inserting a few white carnations here and there between the asters. Cover the whole surface of the palette with the asters and carnations, except the thumb hole and the indented place above the hole. These should be either cut in the construction of the frame or covered with ferns before the flowers are inserted.

Observe the Technicalities.

After constructing the palette proper lay in the splashes of color. These can scarcely be distinguished in the picture, and so in the description immediately following we will endeavor to be very explicit, and with a little study the idea will appear plain. An artist as he arranges the colors on his palette, ready for mixing, beginning with the dark colors at the top, will put out a splash of black, then blue, then dark red, following with the more brilliant dark colors and toning out gradually to the lighter colors and tints, ending with white. In other words, a rainbow is the most convenient arrangement of colors on the palette. Here is an idea which can be very prettily worked out on our piece.

In order to make the effect of a splash of color rather than a dot, first insert a purple aster over the white background in the ordinary way. Then cut a purple aster stemmed in the same way, in two vertically. Insert it on top of the first purple aster deep enough to draw the latter partly to one side. The effect is one of a ragged projection, like a splash of paint. A short distance to the right insert a stemmed American Beauty without foliage. A half blown bud is chosen for this, and on one side a petal is pulled down to produce an irregular edge. For the third splash of color, stem an individual gladiolus flower with a light pink background and a bright variegation. Set the flower down close against the background, and a short distance off the background color of the flower will not be seen, and only the bright streak of color appears. Farther round the palette produce in a similar manner, a spot of yellow and one of delicate pink. Do not overdo too much coloring; choose and adapt a few hints from this suggestive source.

Choice of Easels.

At this juncture mount the piece on a bamboo easel. The latter is chosen rather than a wire easel, on account of its strength and substantial appearance in comparison to a wire easel. Many solid pieces requiring mounting look better on this kind of an easel. They are inexpensive. To properly mount the piece, which by this time has become quite heavy, set the lower edge on the cross bar of the easel and tie through the edge of the wire frame around the uprights of the easel on both sides with strong wire.

Trimming the Palette.

In order to give a starting point for the trimming on the surface of the palette, insert the brushes, or rather, the imitation brushes through the thumb hole, "a la artiste." The easiest way to make the brushes is to whittle out a long stick, smooth it off round and point at one end and on the other end wrap a few sprays of loose wheat heads to resemble a brush. Bronze the brushes and pull them through the thumb hole, or appear to do so. In reality push the pointed ends downwards through the sphagnum near the edge of the thumb hole, and they will hold themselves in place.

Arrange a loose spray of Golden Gate roses according to the rule for making clusters and trail the same along among the brushes, the tip at the top of the group of brushes, and the stem end drawn through the thumb hole. Tie the stem end under the palette to the frame. Let a few of the roses in the stem end fall downward toward the edge of the piece. Add a long spray of delicate green toward the tip of the cluster.

Trimming the Easel.

Bunch some purple, light pink and white asters with wood ferns, in a loose, round cluster and tie with heavy wire around the base of the right upright of the easel, as shown in the illustration. Continue the line of decoration with smaller groups of asters up the right side of the easel, allowing the flowers to stand out away from the edge of the frame. Let them have an independent swing all the way up. Only wire them securely, so that nobody can say that your art is impracticable. Do the same with the fern leaves. A bunch of long-stemmed Shasta daisies is tied over the right end of the cross bar of the easel. These could be just as well stemmed in groups of two or three and inserted on the edge of the palette frame, with the same airy freedom allowed the asters. The group of wood ferns on the top of the right upright are merely set in the hollow bamboo, as in a vase.

This piece well illustrates the principle that a design itself should represent some object or idea, and must be made distinct, and then can be trimmed lavishly. This design is appropriate for an exhibition piece, or for the funeral of an artist, or one who is a patron of art in any line. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

You will find it a very satisfactory source of new business.

John McFarland, North Easton, Mass.

John McFarland, of North Easton, has two nice houses of Carnot roses from which he is cutting good quality blooms. He has over 12,000 single-stemmed chrysanthemums which look well. One of his special favorites is Mrs. E. D. Adams, which he considers an ideal yellow for the trade. A batch of 2,500 Mrs. Thirkell is grown for late yellow blooms. A bench of 400 Cypripedium insigne looked well. Some 1,500 poinsettias are grown in benches for Christmas trade. Lilies, sweet peas and lily of the valley are other specialties, 75,000 of the latter being grown.

Peter Fisher, Ellis, Mass.

The name of Peter Fisher, of Ellis, Mass., is known to every florist in the United States and Canada as that of the originator of Lawson, Enchantress, Mrs. Patten, Governor Wolcott, Nelson Fisher and other choice carnations. The end of August is not the best time to visit Ellis, but an interesting specialist like Mr. Fisher, who has achieved such signal success in late years, is always worth calling on. We found the carnation houses all filled with thrifty stock, a good deal of which had been grown indoors all summer. Flamingo looked very well and Mr. Fisher thinks highly of it. His stock had all been grown indoors. He stated that another prominent grower had not succeeded at all with it grown under glass. Lady Bountiful, White Lawson, Boston Market and Wolcott are grown as whites. The first named and, indeed, all other sorts where grown inside, were immensely superior to plants from the field. Nelson Fisher, Mrs. Patten and Enchantress are grown in quantity. Some fine flowers of the last named were being picked.

A batch of 500 Gibson Beauty looked very promising. Another bench of a new white claimed our attention. This Mr. Fisher assured us was a great improvement over Wolcott, a superior flower in every way, which should stamp it as a winner. A fine new house 33x300 has just been completed, with all modern improvements. It is an even-span, which Mr. Fisher considers much the best.

A house of seedlings, mostly on trial for the second year, will shortly be very interesting. We noted dozens of labels with mysterious hieroglyphics denoting the numerous crosses. They include about every conceivable color. One especially fine one is in the way of Enchantress, but two or three shades deeper in color.

Asparagus Sprengeri and tomatoes are also grown here, but carnations outweigh all else in importance. We observed signs of horticultural progress in Mr. Fisher's youngest son, who was experimenting with a bench of watermelons in one house. May he prove a valued aid to his worthy father.

Thomas Roland, Nahant.

One of the best all around plantsmen supplying the Boston market is Thomas Roland. While perhaps best known for his striking success with Begonia Gloire de Lorraine, he grows a large assortment of other plants and grows them all well.

Mr. Roland's compact greenhouse plant comprises some 40,000 feet of glass, every foot of which is made to count. Pot plants are being grown more extensively here each year and will no doubt eventually displace bench stock altogether. The first house to attract our attention on a recent visit, was one containing 1,200 cyclamen, beautiful stock grown in deep pans in lieu of pots and intended for Christmas trade. Poinsettias are grown in quantity and pans were being filled with several stocky little plants each, in which way they sell the best. Euphorbia jacquiniæflora is also well liked, but is found less easy to root. Erica hyemalis, E. persoluta alba and E. Mediterranea are well grown, the first named being already in bloom. Genistas, azaleas, Acacia armata and Bougainvillea Sanderiana are grown in quantity and numbers of Crimson Rambler roses are being prepared for Easter trade.

Lilium Harrisii for Christmas flowers was at the right stage. Primulas in frames were nice, stocky plants. Marguerites, Mahonia odorata, Campanula medium, gloxinias and achimenes are all handled. In ferns we noted quantities of Nephrolepis Bostoniensis, Piersoni and Scottii in benches and pots. Pteris tremula and P. Microlepia hirta cristata are also favorites. Dracaena terminalis and D. Sanderiana are found useful for making up center-pieces.

Lorraine begonias are, however, Mr. Roland's great specialty. These fill two large houses. One is almost entirely filled with big specimens being grown for Christmas trade, the other being largely young stock for shipping, which were to be seen in thousands, all being in the most vigorous health. In addition to the ordinary light and dark forms, the varieties Glory of Wellesley and Turnford Hall were noted in quantity. Orchids are not omitted. A bench of 500 Cypripedium insigne were pushing a forest of spikes. Oncidium varicosum Rogersii is also grown, some fine sprays being in full bloom.

Two new houses each 140 feet long are planted with the popular market chrysanthemums. These looked first-class. About 10,000 carnations are grown, favorite sorts being Lawson, Adonis, Enchantress, Mrs. Patten, Queen and Boston Market.

A large storage shed was just being completed, which will prove very useful. In addition to his regular greenhouse trade Mr. Roland cares for many of the estates of the Nahant cottagers, employing a large staff of men on this work from spring to fall. Everything on this establishment is as neat as on any private estate, the furnace room being no exception. W. N. Craig.

SEASONABLE WORK.

Just now there is lots of work in the chrysanthemum houses and it is work of a character that it does not pay to leave undone or keep putting off from day to day. All the plants that for any reason did not set a crown bud are now rushing in together and disbudding should be attended to every day. It is wonderful, when the cool nights of September set in, how rapid is the growth of the plants. After the bud is set and swelling it seems as though side shoots spring from everywhere and suckers appear in a night. All these must be removed for the present to keep the energies of the plant concentrated on the developing bud. Later on, when the flower is finishing, the suckers may be left, as they serve a good purpose in using up the surplus moisture from the soil, and they are needed as the nucleus for stock for next year.

Feeding has been gone into recently in these notes and there is no need to rehash it, but throughout this month is the period when feeding is most needed and when the plant is in the best condition to take it up. In using liquid manure water always arrange things so that the liquid is free from sediment. Then it spreads through the soil evenly and does not leave a hard scum on top of the soil. This is noticed more when soot water or cow manure water has been used, soot water particularly clogging up the pores of the soil and interfering with its perfect aeration.

Bone meal should not be used as a top dressing any more now, as the plants will be unable to get much good out of it before the flowers are cut. As the different varieties get up to a point where they are showing color it is well to discontinue feeding altogether. If too long continued the flowers, though they may be a little larger, will most certainly be much softer and more liable to damp in the petals, and will also bruise very easily during shipment.

Tying up should be attended to now while the stems are still pliable, so that they may be clean and straight when ready for market. Flowers with clean, straight stems and perfect foliage sell much more easily than a crooked looking, neglected batch, no matter what kind of flower is on top, and for exhibition, of course, the perfect stem and foliage counts considerable in the grand total of points.

Shading should be attended to along the early benches, where the flowers are fast developing. If one has an entire house of early kinds, shading is easy, but if it happens that one has just one or two benches of early kinds and the rest are later ones, the whole house cannot be shaded indiscriminately as the later ones need all the sun that is going for the next two or three weeks. Tack some heavy cheese cloth over the flowers or shade the glass outside part way up. Shading is absolutely necessary for early flowers, and in most cases for late ones also, as the sun is so hot on occasional days that it will burn the petals, no matter how carefully feeding has been done.

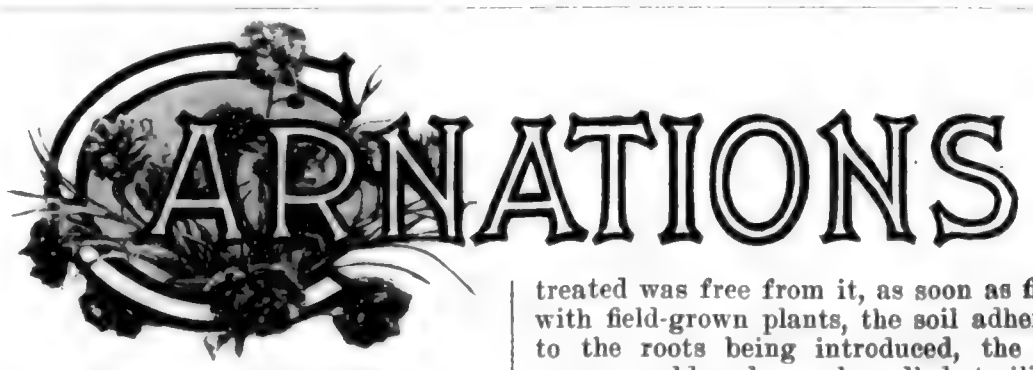
FIRE HEAT FOR MUMS.



How soon will chrysanthemums require fire heat? We are now having light frosts. T. H.

I think a little fire heat is beneficial in the mum house when the thermometer shows 45° in the house. It is far better to leave a crack of air on the house and run a line of steam than to close the ventilators tight to keep the house warm enough without artificial aid. By keeping on a little air with heat the atmosphere of the house is dry and moving, while if closed up tight the air is moist and damping of the florets of the opening flowers is very likely to ensue. With crown buds mostly taken, I would prefer a night temperature of about 50°; terminal buds develop in any temperature above actual freezing.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Stem-Rot.

This trouble is now due to make its appearance if conditions have been such as to favor its development.

The above statement may be at variance with the opinion of those who hold that this disease is constitutional. It is admitted that some varieties are more susceptible to it than others, but the results of numerous experiments and close observation have led me to believe that stem-rot is wholly dependent on surrounding conditions. Nothing has been left undone in the efforts to discover a means of cure, but we are still at a loss for a remedy when a plant is once afflicted.

It was thought sterilization of the soil would prove beneficial and perhaps eliminate it, but admitting a bench when treated was free from it, as soon as filled with field-grown plants, the soil adhering to the roots being introduced, the soil proper could no longer be called sterilized.

The only course left open to us is prevention, and this can be practiced by maintaining conditions beneficial to carnation growth but unsuitable to the development of stem-rot.

Stem-rot is classed as a fungous disease and is transmitted by thread-like spores, but we know these spores will in time perish unless deposited where conditions are favorable to their growth. We also know these spores will remain dormant a long time in soil and that excessive moisture is one of the conditions needed to awaken them to activity.

Should the plants become weakened at housing time through careless digging, exposure of roots to sun and wind, improper planting, too much spraying or watering, very close planting, use of soil in bad mechanical condition, maintaining a damp, stagnant atmosphere, in fact by any means that would tend to retard or prevent vigorous re-establishment, the first step has been taken in the production of ideal conditions for stem-rot to gain a foothold. To be sure, some plants may be affected when brought in, but these usually die a few days after transplanting and cannot be said to have been mistreated.

It is the interval between housing and regular firing that this disease is to be most vigorously guarded against. Although too late to remedy any defects in digging, if planted too deeply a portion of the surface soil may be carefully removed. Atmospheric conditions and supply of moisture in soil and on foliage can be regulated, also the mechanical condition of the soil can be improved, if faulty.

Keep the air in the houses constantly on the move, remove all dead leaves from the plants and allow none to decay on or in the soil. If compelled to spray or syringe, choose a bright morning, that the foliage may dry soon. Give the houses an occasional dusting of grape dust. Decrease the amount of water applied to the paths as rapidly as possible. Break up the surface soil frequently and, above all, do not overwater.

Should any plants become affected, remove at once, with the soil immediately surrounding. The excavation made should be left open a few days to dry out, when new soil can be added and a fresh plant inserted. It is presumed you reserve a few plants of each variety in pots to replace those lost from any cause.

Very little in addition to good treatment can be done for the plants in close proximity to those affected, although watering for a time in a furrow made between the rows and a liberal dusting of air-slaked lime and powdered sulphur around the neck of the plant is advisable.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

FIRE HEAT FOR CARNATIONS

How soon should fire heat be given carnations. We began having light frosts September 15.

T. H.

During the next month a great deal of judgment must be exercised in regard to firing on cold nights. Those who grow roses or other plants which require firing every night now, and employ a night man, can manage much easier to have a little heat around when it is needed than those who grow only carnations or stock which requires carnation temperature. Many carnation growers do not put on a night man until October 1 and some even later than that. There are, in fact, usually but few nights during the first half of October when fire heat is actually necessary in our locality, and if you will keep tab on the weather during September you can usually tell pretty well in the evening how cool it is likely to be the next morning.

Just how cool the houses may run without injury depends on the condition of the plants, etc. If your plants were housed early and have been growing with an abundance of ventilation they will stand a much cooler temperature than if they had been planted lately or if they have been growing very rapidly and soft. Those who have fire heat for other plants will do well to run their houses about 50° through October, unless there is a crop of buds opening, in which case they had best be run at the regular winter temperature. We do not aim to have much of a crop on before about November. Houses which are not in crop will not require such regular temperature while plenty of ventilation can be given and the days are bright.

As I said a few weeks ago, water, sunshine and fresh air are the three mainstays of the carnation. If the weather is bright the temperature can run down close to 40° in the houses occasionally if the ventilators are open. Of course I would not want this to happen several nights in succession, nor would I want it to happen with the ventilators closed. I would rather have my houses run down to 40° with the ventilators open than to have them at 45° with the ventilators closed and no fire heat. At this season they will be down that low only a few hours toward morning and little if any damage will result.

Don't make the mistake of thinking that you can bottle up some of the heat in the houses in the evening by closing the ventilators tight while the houses are warm to prevent them from running down in the after part of the night. There is no surer road to weak stems, soft growth and disease than to follow that practice. If you begin this early to deprive your plants of one of the essentials, what do you think will become of them later on when you cannot open the ventilators for a week at a time on account of ice on the houses? Last winter a prominent grower gave as his opinion that the general sleepiness of the carnation blooms which prevailed for some time was caused by a lack of ventilation, which was caused by the long, severe winter. There is no doubt but that this is true in a very large measure. If we could have opened our ventilators a few inches for several hours each day, there would have been less complaint. That is also largely the reason why carnations which are grown cool will keep longer than those which are grown warm. The cooler-grown ones get more air.

You will lose nothing if you do have fire heat in your carnation houses to have an inch or two of air on all night whenever practicable. Of course you do not want to do this when you have to run several pipes to keep the temperature up to the proper level, but there are many nights when you can run one pipe and an inch of air and keep the temperature about the right mark. That will keep the air moving and prevent it from becoming foul, which should at all times be avoided.

PUT ON A GOOD FRONT.

"Wash all you got and hang out all your wash."

While the camera was on hand the other day we thought it worth while to take a shot at about 175 feet of the gable ends of a few greenhouses, with office in the distance, the grass plot next the street, with some flower beds, palms, elm trees, etc.

There are several different kinds of florists' establishments. If you are a wholesale grower in the country, then appearances don't count for much so far as revenue is concerned, but neat, tidy and if possible ornamental surroundings must be, to anyone in our business, a comfort, a solace and a continued joy.

Some florists are yet found in our cities, where the land has become so valuable that they have covered every inch of their property with glass, leaving no room for outside embellishment. A well-painted greenhouse and office, with the prettiest show of plants and flowers for the passer-by to admire, is all they can do in that line. Then there are others, like this man whose place is photographed, who when building left a margin of fifteen to twenty feet between the houses and the sidewalk and, as he retails all he produces, the very best advertisement, and the cheapest, is for him to make his place attractive, for citizens of all classes pass that way and it makes an impression which, if backed up with business principles, must tell.

There are only about three primary principles in our business: First, supply a first-class article; second, be polite; third, be prompt with all your promises, and if there is a fourth, it is advertise judiciously, and keeping a neat, ornamental place is a cheap advertisement.

Sometimes you see a place like this man's with some rough boards put up enclosing beds of pansies or asters. That looks too commercial. Let the place look as if you put your flower beds and palms there for your own enjoyment and you will be thought all the more of. Even if at this season your houses may contain little that is attractive, it pays well to put on a good front.

Of course, I am well aware that if this was the home of a tailor or butcher it would properly be considered overdone, but as it is the modest home of a florist, it's excusable. Our elevating business is to make the home pleasant, the grounds pretty. Our work appeals to the best and purest sentiments in man, woman and child and therefore, it's our duty as far as we are able to practice what we preach. W. S.

Calla Elliottiana at Pasadena, Cala.

CALLA ELLIOTTIANA.

Now that the yellow calla is attracting so much attention, as it justly should, perhaps the readers of the Review would like to see how calla Elliottiana looks growing in its full strength and beauty, four feet high, flowers as large as any large white calla, leaves fifteen inches across, at Pasadena, Cal. They make a magnificent show, with their rich, deep yellow blooms, without that purple spot in the throat, which is found in all other yellow callas. C. H. Hovey.

PRINCESS OF WALES.

Undoubtedly more Princess of Wales violets have been planted for this winter's blooming than ever before and undoubtedly a great many will try them that have not grown them before. To those the following notes may be of some value:

Princess of Wales does best, in my experience, outdoors through the summer. Those who planted out their stock in May or June will now have nice plants but these should not be housed too soon. I commence housing mine at the last of September. Undoubtedly early housing is a great detriment to the flowering of the plants through the winter. If housed in September, more so the early part, the plants will make a very soft growth in October and November, which will throw the plants out of bloom and it will be into January before blooms begin to come again. I think the first and second week of October is the best time to house them. The plants are then well hardened by the cool weather, and there is little risk of their all going to leaves, after that date. I have not had to use any protection on mine in the field until about October 15.

In planting in the field I plant in rows fourteen inches apart, and twelve inches between the plants and every fifth row leave a space of two feet. Then you have your plants in beds six feet wide and when the nights get cold I run a plank along each side of the bed. You have then a cold frame. I protect them with sash, mats or shutters. These all come six feet wide, so there is not much trouble in protecting them for winter's blooming. It is policy to have the housing done by Thanksgiving or before.

The Princess of Wales is a very hardy violet and a great many things can be done with it that cannot be done with doubles. Last year I flowered a house up to New Year's and then covered the roof and kept the house dark and kept it at the freezing point until the beginning of March. The covering was then removed and the plants were started slowly and came in bloom for Easter. The pick for that day was fifty blooms to the plant. Owing to the lateness of Easter this year it will be a difficult matter to have violets in bloom. I am trying a method to see if it will not be possible to get them. Wm. Sim.

LAELIA ELEGANS.

During the months of August and September, when cattleyas and, indeed, all orchid flowers are scarce, nothing is more useful than this beautiful Brazilian lælia. First introduced in 1865, it has never become plentiful and its consequent high price has deterred many from growing it. While it is never likely to be as common or inexpensive as many other lælias or cattleyas, it is now being offered at a very moderate price in America and any who may feel tempted to buy a few plants may be encouraged by remembering that this is one of the few orchids that propagate readily and with the greatest ease by cutting the plants up.

The culture of Lælia elegans is not at all difficult. It succeeds well in the cattleya house, either on a stage in a position well up to the light, or suspended from the roof. For compost we prefer good osmunda fern fibre and the plants succeed either in pots, pans or baskets. For the strongest plants we think pots are preferable. Anyone who can grow Cattleya labiata or C. Trianæ can succeed with Lælia elegans, for it needs no special treatment. One good point also in favor of it is that it usually gives two crops of flowers and these flowers come when orchids are in good demand, and that orchids are increasing in popularity admits of no question.

There are quite a number of fine named forms of Lælia elegans and in a collection of imported plants a wonderful variation will be seen. Sepals and petals are usually white or rose, varying to carmine, and the lip rich magenta or purple. The scapes are erect, carrying anywhere from two to a dozen or more flowers each, which will average six inches across. We had as many as twenty-three flowers on a scape of Lælia elegans Lindeni. Out of some twenty named forms in our collection a few of the best are: Turneri, a very fine variety with deep, rosy pink sepals and petals and a rich magenta lip; prasiata Lindeni, alba, Schilleriana superba, a magnificent form; tenebrosa, a very dark variety; paralenchos, Littleana and Wolstenhomei.

The extreme scarcity of this beautiful lælia in its native habitat makes it unlikely that it will ever be much cheaper than it is today. Our enterprising American orchid dealers are fully alive to the value of this orchid commercially and now carry nice stocks of it. Our illustration was kindly furnished by Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. J., who were fortunate enough to secure a large importation in 1903, and the cut shows that they are cultivating it very successfully. W. N. CRAIG.

CUCUMBERS.

Potting On and Planting.

Supplementary to my former notes regarding the planting of cucumber seeds, I would recommend that as soon as the plants are well up and have taken a good hold of the soil, if the pots contain more than one plant the poorest ones should be pulled out and the strongest one left. As they are fast growing it will not take long before the pots will be well filled with roots and a shift into a larger size will be of benefit, as it is necessary that the plants be kept growing freely. If there is a likelihood of any delay in planting and a danger of the plants getting pot-bound, I would prefer to move them up two sizes at once (into 5-inch pots) rather than have to move them a second time, as the roots are soft and easily injured. An open, turfy compost should be used for potting, a close, retentive soil being unsuitable for cucumbers at any stage of their growth. They should be kept in a good light situation to avert drawing.

Though some large and successful growers plant their cucumbers in solid beds, or in the soil that forms the floor of the house, I prefer benches, especially for winter crops, as here the soil can be kept a few degrees warmer and the roots are better under control. Besides, the plants are better up to the light and to keep the foliage strong and firm in texture all the light procurable is needed.

A mistake is often made in giving cucumbers too much soil in their permanent quarters. I well remember the first crop of cucumbers I ever planted. It was in the spring and in a bench from which carnation plants had been removed. We forked up the soil in the bench and worked in a liberal dressing of well rotted manure. The plants soon got a hold and when they got down to business the growth was so luxuriant that it took quite some work to keep them trained in shape. But the principal trouble we had to contend with was the setting of the fruit. It was not until the trellis was covered with growth and the bench pretty well filled with roots that the fruit began to set freely. On visiting a neighbor I found that he had the roots of his plants confined into a space about a foot wide and eight inches deep, by means of boards which formed a box running the length of the house, consequently from plants set about the same time as my own he had cucumbers ready for market before I had procured a decent set. Since then experience has taught us to confine the roots to a more limited space. The box idea is a good one. A good size is fourteen inches wide and eight inches deep. This should be but partly filled at planting, more soil being added as the plants require it. Or the plants may be set in hills, using only a shovelful or two of soil to start with and adding more as the roots appear on the outside of the compost. Where rotting at the neck is troublesome the latter is the better method, as it insures against any water lodging around the neck of the plant. A rough, turfy compost should be used and about three feet apart is the best distance to set the plants. W. S. CROYDON.

PREPARING COMPOST.

Though it will be some time before the work of filling the benches in the vegetable houses will begin, the present is a good time to have the compost attended to. Most growers will have had the material piled up since spring, or probably since last fall, but some may be so unfortunate as to not have it composted even now. To any such belated ones I would say, get it together without delay. The only way that lost time can partly be made up for is by chopping the material up finely and turning it frequently, so as to get the different ingredients thoroughly incorporated. Only thoroughly rotted manure should now be used for the compost, as there is not time enough for chemical action to reduce the excess of organic substances.

Given a fairly good soil, I do not advocate the use of bone or other commercial fertilizer in the compost to be used in the vegetable forcing houses, even if the compost has been prepared months ahead, but in the case of delay, where the compost has to be mixed only a short time before it is to be used, my advice would be, by all means cut it out altogether. Good farmyard manure I have found to be the best for mixing in the general compost. Some subjects, such as tomatoes, cucumbers and cauliflower, might be benefited by the application of a little bone meal to the soil, but, if the soil is fairly good, the farmyard article is sufficient to promote a good healthy growth, and when the maturing stage arrives, when a stimulant is found necessary, it can very conveniently be applied in the form of liquid manure.

Where the compost has been prepared for some time the present is a good time to have it turned over and well chopped up, so that all the ingredients will be thoroughly mixed. Then it will be in readiness for filling the benches when the time comes. It is poor policy to leave the soil unturned until you are ready to fill the benches, as the soil will settle and be beaten hard with rains. This hardening naturally restricts the passage of air through the soil and loosening is necessary to insure the sweetening of the compost by freer admission of air. Besides, the soil will often become so hard as to render it impenetrable by rains and becomes too dry, in which condition some of the essential chemical properties may be eliminated to a hurtful degree. Of course, there is always a possibility of having too much of a good thing and, in the case of frequent heavy rains just previous to filling the benches, some means should be provided for protecting the pile so that the soil will not become too sodden. The best condition in which the soil can be filled into the benches is a sort of happy medium, neither too wet nor too dry.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Generally speaking, the past week has been a satisfactory one, stock clearing out well in nearly every case. Roses are coming of better quality. For the best grades prices have stiffened a little, otherwise there is no change. Carnations have sold at from $1 to $3 per 100. Some very good blooms are now coming in, Enchantress, Fair Maid, Queen, Lawson and other popular sorts. The severe storm of September 15 spoiled many outdoor flowers and the output of these has shortened appreciably, particularly in the case of feverfew, stocks and asters. The latter, where of decent quality, sell readily at from 75 cents to $1.50 per 100. Dahlias also suffered severely from the wind and rain but will soon recover. Chrysanthemums will appear this week. Lily of the valley sells at an average of $4. Other flowers noted include cosmos, purple gentian, white boltonia and hunnemannia, Mexican poppy. The latter is a fine keeper, lasting four or five days in water. It should be grown more by florists. Some good gladioli are still coming in. These have been extra good this year. Asparagus and adiantum show no particuar change. Prospects for fall trade are much better than a year ago.

Various Notes.

A call at the old Park street market the past week found a force of men busy giving it a thorough overhauling. The walls, ceilings and pillars are whitened, which takes away some of the gloom. When completed, in a few days, it will present a clean and cozy appearance. Some eighty growers, including many large ones, will use this market and we understand additional space can be had when needed.

Along with the other eastern cities, Boston got the heaviest rainfall on September 15 experienced for years. The local fall was three and a half inches, although four inches were recorded in some parts of the state, all within a space of eight hours, about two inches falling from 7 to 8:30 a. m. Flowers were badly dashed, limbs torn from trees by the force of the wind and fruits severely thinned.

James Rough, better known as Jim, of the firm of J. Rough & Son, on Huntington avenue, has been appointed manager of the new Music Hall flower market.

P. W. Moen, the millionaire wire manufacturer, who died at Shrewsbury, Mass., on September 14, aged 47, was a very successful chrysanthemum exhibitor at the Boston show last year and his gardener had a splendid lot of plants for this year's exhibition which will be much missed.

Schlegel & Fottler Co. is making extensive changes in the seed store on South Market street. They have acquired the street floor and will in future use that exclusively for counter trade. In the basement they will have a large cold storage plant for retarding liliums, lily of the valley, etc. They report a big demand for their pure culture American mushroom spawn.

Samuel Neil, of Dorchester, has his carnation houses planted chiefly with Fair Maid, Boston Market, The Queen, Maceo and some seedlings. He meditates taking out several hot water boilers and substituting steam.

James Wheeler was the speaker at the Gardeners' and Florists' Club meeting on September 20, taking as his topic "Some Pertinent Questions," which he discussed interestingly and ably.

The fall show opening on September 22 and closing September 25 will be one of the largest ever held by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. The main exhibition hall is reserved for plants, the lecture hall for fruit, the loggia, sides of lecture hall and hallways to vegetables and the main portion of the lecture hall to cut flowers. Some of the leading exhibitors in the plant and cut flower classes are J. S. Bailey, A. F. Estabrook, Lager & Hurrell, Henry A. Dreer, Bayard Thayer, Harvard Botanic Gardens, Farquhar & Co., Julius Roehrs and Mrs. J. S. Gardner. A full report will appear in next week's Review.

H. A. Stevens & Co. have five houses devoted to carnations at East Dedham, growing 12,000 in all. Mrs. Patten, Fair Maid and Boston Market each fill one house. Other sorts grown are Enchantress, Wolcott, Lawson, Harry Fenn, J. H. Manley and Harlowarden. Some good seedlings are also being tried. Plants all look first class and are now giving a fine lot of bloom. A roomy cellar is devoted to mushroom culture, the pure culture spawn being used. Splendid crops were secured last year. Collections of phloxes and peonies are also being worked up.

The annual fair at Clinton is noted for its fine displays of plants and cut flowers. This year's exhibition was no exception to the rule. Very fine groups of plants were arranged by E. V. R. Thayer, E. O. Orpet, gardener; N. Thayer, A. P. Meredith, gardener, and J. E. Thayer, J. F. Clarke, gardener. The principal flowering plants used were Lagerstroemia Indica, Campanula isophylla, orchids, begonias, gesnerias and gloxinias. F. P. Sawyer had the best florists' group, E. W. Breed being second. The latter had the winning floral design, being closely followed by Mr. Sawyer. Messrs. F. A. Blake, W. S. Windsor, E. W. Breed and F. P. Sawyer were among the leading exhibitors of cut flowers. Worcester Conservatories showed fine Beauty roses. Bayard Thayer, Wm. Anderson, gardener, had a beautifully arranged large circular tank of aquatics. E. O. Orpet showed a number of seedling cattleyas and an Odontoglossum Pescatorei carrying a spike with sixty flowers, the latter grown in fine fern fibre. James Wheeler, of Brookline, judged the floral part of the fair.

The house of Superintendent Doogue, of the Public Gardens, was broken into September 12. The thieves had a large quantity of plate packed for removal, but were scared away by a dog. A gold watch valued at $150, gold fob worth $35 and some diamonds were taken.

Cattleya labiata and other seasonable orchid flowers are making their appearance in some of the store windows, as are cyclamens, ardisias and Erica hyemalis. Pot plant trade is dull as yet. Cooler conditions will enliven it.

J. Horace McFarland, of Harrisburg, Pa., has been making a short visit to Boston friends.

Houghton & Dutton, the well known Tremont Row dry goods dealers, held a flower day September 17 and claim to have distributed 100,000 roses among visitors to their store.

The saloon of the S. S. Romanic, which sailed from Boston for the Mediterranean on September 17, was a veritable conservatory. More flowers were sent to outgoing passengers than on any steamer leaving Boston this year.

The many Boston friends of Jacob W. Manning, the well known nurseryman, were pained to hear of his death September 16. A note on his life appears in this issue.

W. N. Craig.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Market.

The horse and dog shows being over, the summer people have begun to leave us, and business has slacked quite a little. American Beauty roses lead the market and the best retail for from $5 to $6 a dozen. Some very nice Kaiserins have been offered on the avenue this week at $3.50 to $4 a dozen. Orchids bring from 75 cents to $1.50 each, according to variety and quality. Valley is always in demand. Dahlias and gladioli find a fair sale at $1 to $2 per dozen, if they are of first quality. There is no sale for outdoor stuff that is not the best.

Various Notes.

The storm of last Thursday morning was the most terrific that Newport has experienced for years. Hundreds of trees are down all over the city. The flower gardens were badly torn and many beautiful vases containing valuable decorative plants were wrecked.

The September meeting of the Newport Horticultural Society took place last Wednesday evening and was especially well attended. Final arrangements for this week's show were made.

Siebrecht & Son have been doing some very attractive dinner decorations lately. For one large party they used baskets of Kaiserin roses and lily of the valley.

William S. Nichol, gardener to Dr. Alexander S. Clarke, was drowned while bathing off the shore near the Clarke estate. Mr. Nichol was one of the best known gardeners in the city. He leaves a widow and two children.

Hodgson arranged for Mr. and Mrs. T. Shaw-Safe on Wednesday last a very handsome dinner decoration of gardenias.

Stewart Ritchie is busy painting his houses and otherwise getting ready for the coming winter season. His late planted sweet peas have done finely this year and found a ready market at the satisfactory price of 50 cents per hundred.

John T. Allan, head gardener to John R. Drexel, is having many inquiries from seedsmen and others who wish to purchase his new seedling begonia. This was awarded a silver medal last spring by the Newport Horticultural Society. It is of the Vernon type, but unlike the Vernon in that the flowers are double and of a most beautiful cerise pink. Being very dwarf, it has every appearance of being a most desirable acquisition, not only for bedding but also for summer flower dishes for table decoration, as it is in its best bloom during the warm weather.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market shows but little animation. Saturday and Monday the usual week's improvement was evident. Good stock sells readily, but the mass of inferior stuff overwhelms the market and makes the average low. In another week the first battalions of mums will be here. Everything indicates a tremendous supply. Asters and gladioli are nearing their end. The price of the latter has materially advanced. Dahlias, except the cactus varieties and the new sorts, are practically unsalable. The prospects are for an enormous carnation supply. Some wonderful new varieties in red are soon to assert their claims for precedence. Ideal, Testout and Mrs. Morgan roses are growing in number weekly. Violets continue to arrive in small quantities, but are not yet wanted, and it would be far better policy to hold them until October. Geo. Saltford predicts a good violet year and so agrees with the other experts who have investigated personally the prospects for the coming season. The plants were never in better condition.

Various Notes.

The New York Botanical Garden opens its fall lecture season on October 1. The lectures will be given every Saturday at 4:30 p. m. in the museum building. Prof. Hugo de Vries will be the first speaker and his subject is "The Origin of Species as Illustrated by the Evening Primroses." Dr. Britton, who has been recently in the Bahamas, will speak October 8 on the results of his botanical explorations there. Other speakers will be Prof. Lloyd, Prof. Underwood, Dr. Murrill, Dr. Hollick, Dr. Richards and Dr. McDougall. The whole series promises to be very interesting.

Wednesday and Thursday of this week the New York dahlia show at the rooms of the American Institute takes place. A good display is assured.

Four new houses are being erected at Littleneck, N. Y., by Hitchings & Co., for W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr. The range will be devoted to carnations, roses and palms and will be very complete and artistic.

The American Bankers' Association has been lavishly entertained by the bankers in New York during the past week, one feature being a banquet at the Waldorf, the floral decorations for which were unlimited, American Beauties being used with lavish prodigality. J. H. Small & Sons secured the coveted commission. Wm. A. Peterson, of Chicago, was among the visiting bankers.

At the funeral of T. Dewitt Osborn, a prominent politician, a few days ago, it required ten carriages to carry the floral offerings, some of the designs being of exquisite beauty and unstinted value. The leading Brooklyn florists secured the bulk of the orders. Apart from funeral work there is little doing with the retailers, though the theaters and schools are now in full blast and the return of the 400 to the city has begun.

The cyclonic storm of a week ago did considerable damage to outdoor flowers, nothing equaling it in severity or downpour having occurred during the whole season.

Not only the retailers but many of the wholesale cut flower men have displays of Scottii ferns in their windows. Every week adds to its popularity.

Jos. Fenrich had his first shipment of white chrysanthemums on Saturday.

Wm. Ghormley was again at his desk on Saturday, after many weeks of illness, and seems on the high road to complete recovery.

Young & Nugent have their new front about finished and will have one of the handsomest stores on Twenty-eighth street.

John Daire is foreman for A. J. Guttman, at Summit, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Kreshover have just returned from a long and greatly enjoyed European trip.

Bowling.

Last Thursday evening the Flatbush Bowling Club had a large attendance and enthusiastic contest. One is always certain of a welcome and an interesting evening's sport every Thursday of the year, an example to a "sister club" in a neighboring borough it would do well to heed if any cups are to be won at Washington in 1905. Meantime Flatbush may be depended on to send a representative team there and it has a young "Steve" of its own by the name of Irwin who will be heard from. The scores were as follows:

Mellis	116	134
Wocker	108	125	126
H. Dailledouze	134	147	164
P. Dailledouze	115	140	148
Zeller	111	135	148
Schmutz	117	137	142	144
Riley	127	134	137	164
Pepper	63	66	71	76
Shaw	122	134	141	150
Irwin	136	173	189	180

The New York Bowling Club for the season of 1904-1905 will be organized the first week in October and already a large attendance is assured, the following names having been placed on the roll as a foundation for what ought to be the winning club at Washington; Theodore Lang, F. H. Traendly, P. O'Mara, Julius Roehrs, Jr., W. E. Marshall, Alex. Burns, John I. Raynor, J. B. Nugent, Alex. J. Guttman, Jos. A. Manda, Jos. Fenrich, J. A. Pepper, Wm. H. Siebrecht and J. A. Shaw. A dozen more are to be heard from. The club when complete should total twenty active members.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The remarkably cool weather the early part of the past week and a few warm days later made trade in cut flowers both good and bad. Most of the business done last week was decorations for the downtown stores, that had their fall openings. A number of early fall wedding decorations are reported for this week. Funeral work, too, has been somewhat slow with some of us, while others report plenty.

Regarding stock at the commission houses, we might say that it is of fairly good quality. It is very gratifying to the trade that some really good carnations are to be had again and from now on plenty of these will be in the market at cheap prices until Thanksgiving. Really good stock can be bought for $1 per 100, more white than any others.

There is certainly no scarcity in white and pink roses, $6 per 100 buying the best of these. Meteor and Liberty are not so plentiful just now. Some good Chatenay and Carnot are to be had, but not in large lots. American Beauties are somewhat scarce, that is, long fancy. Shorts are abundant at $3 and $4 per 100. Fancies are up to $3 and $3.50 per dozen. Valley is of extra quality at $3 and $4 per 100. Very little outdoor stock is coming in. Asters and hydrangeas are nearly all gone, so are gladioli and tuberose stocks. Smilax and asparagus are looking better, with plenty of other greens in the market.

The growers report that about two-thirds of the carnations are already housed and that the plants are uniformly fine and so far are free from rust and that plenty of first-class stock will soon be in the market.

Various Notes.

We had for visitors the past week, J. J. Hess, wife and son, from Omaha, Neb. They spent ten days here seeing the sights at the World's Fair. Mr. Allan, of George & Allan, Cincinnati, and Mr. Hunkel, of Holton & Hunkel, Milwaukee, also took in the sights. They killed some little time at the big floral clock. H. B. Beatty, treasurer of the S. A. F., also spent a week at the World's Fair.

Henry Ostertag had a busy week decorating at the World's Fair. The decoration at the Tyrolean Alps for the National Peace Commission was one of the most elaborate ever given at this famous resort. A big lot of cut stock was used.

The Beyer boys had a few of those big fall openings downtown the past week, which kept all hands busy and made their place look like mowing day.

Miss Schnell, of East St. Louis, reports business good, with plenty of funeral work at all times.

Messrs. Allen of Mississippi, Miller of Ohio, and Betts of Montana, who are members of the National Commission at the World's Fair, are heartily in favor of a grand national flower show in November to be held in the Horticulture building. Superintendent Hadkinson is already laying his plans in that direction.

Nathan Smith & Son, of Adrian, Mich., have a fine bed of the dark red canna named Express at the World's Fair, which attracts much attention from visitors in the trade. This bed, with those of Kasting, Schray and Obermeyer, of Parkersburg, all received a medal from the judges the past week.

J. J. B.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The week opened auspiciously, there being marked activity among the decorators, with a fair number of out of town orders. The dahlia is now seen in splendid form, the best varieties coming into bloom with increasing freedom. Samuel S. Pennock received 6,000 on Monday from L. K. Peacock, of Atco, who states that the plants have recovered from the effects of the terrific storm of last week.

The variety Clifford W. Bruton is the most popular sort today for shipping. Next to dahlias, Beauties, hydrangeas and gladioli are in good demand, also valley, Kaiserins and carnations. Good asters sell well, but are on the wane.

With the Decorators.

The department stores are decorating finely for their annual fall openings this week. J. J. Habermehl's Sons decorated Wanamaker on Monday, while Hugh Graham had elaborate decorations for Lit Bros. on Tuesday and Blum Bros. on the same day and again on Wednesday. The first named firm decorated the new Belleview-Stratford hotel, which opened on Tuesday. Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora was used in large quantities, also dahlias, gladioli, etc. The market was cleared of wild smilax. The Leo Niessen Co. appeared to have a monopoly on this commodity and could have sold a great deal more. As announced in the REVIEW some weeks ago, the Messrs. Habermehl have a new down-town store in the Belleview-Stratford which is now open.

From the West.

Edward Reid writes from Courtney, N. D., that he is having a fine time, taking it easy and knocking over prairie chickens. He shot fourteen in an hour. He reports the wheat crop in splendid condition, with prices high enough to please the farmers. He strongly advises the retailers to buy flour now. Mr. Reid has left for Spiritwood, twenty miles away, and will be back very soon at his post. Meanwhile A. M. Campbell is busy shipping fine valley, Beauties, etc., for his firm.

Hatboro.

Eugene Weiss received a visit last week from Charles E. Meehan and John McIntyre, escorted by Samuel Lilley. They found a range of five houses planted with Brides and Maids in solid beds, both own-root and grafted stock two years old in most promising condition. Several other houses in young stock of the same varieties in benches were looking exceptionally well, also one of Liberty which is on trial.

A Visit to Dreer's.

The local train was delayed outside the city. A cab and extra money to the cabby resulted in nearly running down a man at Eighth and Market streets and in just missing the last ferry boat. One hour's wait, even in Camden, at a busy time is not soothing, but when you finally reach your destination and find the man whom you disappointed at the ferry smiling and pleasant, with no word of reproach, you feel that man is a pretty good sort, deserving the success he has achieved.

To get down to the subject. Phil was honored a few days ago by an invitation from Herbert G. Tull, treasurer of the H. A. Dreer Co., whose clever head and sound judgment have kept the concern with Dun, Bradstreet and Mrs. Grundy. After explanations from the depressed late-comer, a tour of the place began. Not a serious tour with note book and solemn dissertation, but a lively, jolly sort of tour as of two school boys out for a lark. That means impressions of a misty order, so don't complain.

The houses are in excellent condition, full of clean, healthy stock. One is not impressed with the one-palm idea at Riverton, although it was here a little over a year ago that I first heard the subject discussed. The Dreer policy in palms, as in everything else, is to have plenty of all the best kinds. The stock of Kentia Belmoreana predominated, sister K. F. coming next; a fine assortment of home grown plants being reinforced by some large stuff imported a year ago. Areca lutescens seemed happy, to judge by its appearance, and thoroughly at home. Cocos Weddeliana filled several houses, in 2-inch, 3-inch and, I am sorry to say, made up three or four in a pot. This is required by the customers, but it seems a barbarous custom, sacrificing the plant's exquisite grace. The stock of this palm was in the pink of condition. It was said that its use in ferneries is much more general than that of Kentia Belmoreana. A lively row over the identity of a certain block of stuff, which both should have known, was settled by George A. Strohlein, who was showing a Bostonian around. A stop was made at the saw mill, where pine boards are being reduced to the required length for boxes, one man being constantly in attendance, with occasional help to pile the strips. Another stop was in the tender aquatic house where James T. Clark was busily engaged in "fishing," his whole soul being engaged in an effort to extract certain denizens of the water from their retreat. After a hearty greeting between the boss carpenter, who was making repairs, and Mr. Tull—there is the right spirit at Riverton—the pair were joined, in an outside ramble by Mr. Simm, who pointed out the beauties of the water lilies, explaining the slight differences between old and newer varieties. The ponds made a fine appearance, many showy blooms brightening the surface.

The perennials were still a mass of blooms, rudbeckias, helianthus and summer asters producing rich color effect. The immense quantity of hardy phlox planted in solid colors was a sight long to be remembered. The plants were small, probably the size that will be sent out in 3-inch pots next spring, but the blooms were enormous and of most delicate coloring.

The Skinner rain system, which gives an inch of rain in five hours of gentle drizzle, received a practical demonstration. A look at the improved alternanthera showed that it was an improvement over its parent, dull and colorless besides its progeny.

A heated argument on the relative expense of running a large and a small place, in which Mr. Tull had all the figures at his fingers' ends, was somewhat cooled by a gentle rainfall, the real thing, not Skinner system. It would never do to miss the big lot full of perennials that Mr. Eisele was personally laying out on my last visit, now full of well-grown stuff. Then there were varieties of tritoma in full bloom, very showy; a new ampelopsis, a field of hardy teas—I use the adjective advisedly—that had made strong growths, and ferns! My good gracious! What quantities of ferns there were in the frames and looking well, too. Some maidenhair was fine.

All too soon came train time. On the way back through the sheds Mr. Tull pointed out the corner where the office used to be when Mr. Dreer and he did all the clerical work eighteen years ago. The present treasurer slept in a little room over the office in those days.

Inquiry about a fine lot of tiny Dracæna terminalis called out a deserved rebuke from Mr. Tull, but he quickly softened, pointing out with justifiable pride a particularly fine lot of buckwheat coal, nearly as big as nut, from a special colliery.

Farewells at the office were interrupted by a flying rush of Mr. Strohlein after a bloom of the new geranium Telegraph, so named because the introducer's former employer made a discovery in that line.

Various Notes.

Clarence J. Watson reports that his firm of S. S. Pennock finds a good demand for dahlias, especially fancy varieties.

Charles E. Meehan has kept his force working overtime filling orders for Beauties, hydrangeas, etc., at the Flower Market.

The Leo Niessen Co. filled an order for 6,000 dahlias and 1,000 gladioli this week.

D. T. Conner will furnish Lord & Burnham Co. material for a new greenhouse for Mrs. W. L. Harvey.

A party including George Samtman and George Waterfield went out to see S. Mortenson, of Southampton. They report the place in excellent condition.

Wm. F. Dreer has been summering at "Takitezy," not a Japanese resort, but one that nearly everyone has enjoyed, if but for an hour.

M. Rice & Co. report that August and September to date have been the two best months their firm has ever experienced.

Chas. F. Edgar & Co. received on Monday a shipment of 300 scarlet seedling carnations that Mr. Muth considers the finest thing of its kind on the market. The firm expects regular shipments of this sterling novelty.

W. C. P-ay, Kinkora, N. J., has built two new houses 17x112 feet each. His violets are among the finest that come to this market, being noted for their long stems.

Wm. Swayne, of Kennett, has built a new mushroom range. His new carnation will be pushed.

Yellow daisies are one of Wm. J. Baker's specialties.

The Henry F. Michell Co. state that many lily growers who have been waiting for the Japan-grown bulbs are now buying Bermuda-grown Harrisii. The former are late in arriving and the latter are very fine.

Pennock Bros. secured the first dozen chrysanthemums of the season last week. The variety was Montmort.

Benjamin Gibbs, E. Bernheimer's right-hand man, reports an encouraging demand for field-grown carnations, also for good roses.

Fred Ehret had a clean-up order for Beauties and asters on Tuesday.

Monday night saw the closing of the Bellevue. Despite the fact that society was out of town, every table was engaged for that night long ago, making the last dinner a brilliant affair. The Bellevue has been the home of the Clover Club, the Five O'Clock Club and other kindred organizations. Its dinners are famous and within its walls many bright ideas have been executed by our leading floral artists.

The Wholesale FLORIST of Philadelphia

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Though it can not be said to be rushing, trade is nevertheless very good, and I do not believe that anyone is complaining. Many of the best flower buyers are now returning from their summer homes and that alone is very beneficial to the trade, but still it's true that real business does not start up till the advent of the chrysanthemum, and that will be about a month. Mums about this city are looking very well, and some fine blooms are to be expected. B. P. Critchell, who produces some of the best mums grown here, says that his stock is in fine shape and that the quality will be fine this year.

Asters are quite scarce and much sought after. The price is consequently on the rise. There are more white ones than other colors. Some extra fine tuberoses are to be had and the price asked for them is very low, but they move slowly. Gladioli are still very good and some extra fine dahlias sell well. Carnations are very much as last reported and roses likewise. The price of Beauties is rising, though, and they are selling fine. Some good valley is coming in. There is a good demand for "green goods," smilax especially.

Various Notes.

T. W. Hardesty is again the father of a little girl, who arrived last Tuesday. Tom's family now consists of three girls and one boy, and all of them enjoy the best of health on his Kentucky plantation.

Chas. Jones reports business as rapidly picking up on Walnut Hills. He and Mr. Brooks can now be seen daily doing the wholesale district with their smart turnout, buying the best stock that can be found, as that is the only kind of goods that Mr. Jones sells.

Wm. Rodgers is cutting some of the best carnations that are coming into this market. Many of them are from plants held over the summer and they are very good.

The first shipment of carnations of the season was received this week by E. G. Gillett from the B. K. & B. Floral Co., Richmond, Ind. The blooms were fine and for so early in the season show that this firm's stock is rapidly rounding into shape.

J. T. Conger is busy putting up a large wedding decoration in Wyoming, O. Mr. Conger is located at Hartwell, O., where he has a very nice greenhouse plant of moderate size, in which he grows considerable stock. But owing to his increasing business he is a constant buyer in the wholesale market.

The writer's trip to the World's Fair was one of great benefit to him and he would advise every florist who can possibly do so to go, as he will never begrudge the money spent. And, by the way, J. J. B. must have been doing the Pike pretty well himself to have seen the writer there so often.

Max Rudolph's partner, M. H. Meyer, accompanied by his family, is at the St. Louis Fair this week.

C. J. Ohmer.

ALBINO PANDANUS.

I have a pandanus in which the middle leaves as they come out are a whitish yellow instead of striped with green. When they get to their full length they begin to die back. The lower leaves are mostly a pale green. Can you tell me what the trouble is? H. S. P.

From the description it is evident that the pandanus in question (which is inferred to be P. Veitchii) is an albino, a condition that is frequently met with by large growers of this plant. In such a case the leaves have not enough of the green coloring matter to keep them in good condition, and owing to this weakness the tips of the leaves decay. There is no real cure for such a plant, for though the foliage will sometimes and at some seasons turn entirely green, yet the character of the plant has been fixed and there will be a recurrence of the pure white or yellow foliage as the plant produces fresh growth. Such plants are usually thrown away by careful growers, as cuttings taken from them will usually perpetuate the trouble, and the only method upon which one may rely is in the careful selection of cuttings that show distinct striping.

It is a common failing among variegated plants to produce shoots in which the green coloring is absent, and the only way to avoid such a trouble is by selecting cuttings that show the typical markings of the variety.

The plant in question is not likely to be changed or cured by any special treatment, though a heavy soil seems less likely to encourage such a condition than a light compost, so far as I have been able to judge. W. H. Taplin.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There has been a visible improvement in the state of the market since last report. Not only is city business more active, but out of town customers are buying in larger quantities. There has also been an improvement in so far as stock is concerned. Asters are very near their finish and the result is a betterment in many other departments. Carnations are increasing in quantity and improving in quality, finding a very fair market at remunerative prices. In general the quality is considerably ahead of what it has been at this season in previous years. Of course the grade is not up to the midwinter standard, but it is a decided improvement on what has been in the market in recent weeks.

With some of the large growers Beauties are going off crop and with others the first cut is just coming on. There are large supplies of the short-stemmed material and in general there is little difficulty in filling orders in this department. Tea roses are of better average quality, but it still takes considerable grading to supply the kind of material necessary for the shipping trade. Neither Bride nor Bridesmaid is in abundant supply. Chatenay is ahead of the demand and there is plenty of Liberty.

The first violets arrived Tuesday and a few premature Fitzwygram chrysanthemums are seen. Gladioli are about at an end and outdoor stock now cuts little figure in the market. There are large quantities of "green goods" and the demand in this department is showing considerable increase.

Various Notes.

The death of Mr. Adams, of Adams & Westlake Co., of Highland Park, gave the retailers considerable business. Fritz Bahr had more than he could do, working all night Monday and being compelled to call in outside help.

The Chicago Carnation Co. has leased a stand in the Growers' Exchange from October 1. Crabb & Hunter have also arranged for space October 1. Stollery Bros. resumed selling there on Tuesday. Mrs. Stollery is still in California.

Weiland & Risch are believers in eastern talent. They have Dennis Murphy, well known to New Jersey rose growers, as foreman. John Lord is now with Mr. Risch in the wholesale store. Mr. Lord is experienced in the New York and Boston markets.

E. E. Pieser returned on Monday from a two months' vacation spent in Canada. He has some very interesting stories to tell of the things he saw where people live close to nature.

E. C. Amling is having his place redecorated preparatory to the reception of the big chrysanthemum cut expected next week.

Charles Fisk reports everything lovely on the west side. Business has been quite satisfactory to him.

A. Lange and family returned this week from a nine-weeks' visit in Colorado. They made Colorado Springs their headquarters and visited all points of interest in that vicinity. Mr. Lange speaks highly of the establishments of Wm. Clark, the Park Floral Co. and J. F. Wilcox, which he visited recently.

J. A. Budlong has returned from his visit to Providence, R. I. He made the trip going on his bicycle but came back by train.

John Sterrett is now with C. W. McKellar and in a short time his son, Willie Sterrett, will be added to the force there.

N. J. Wietor calls attention to the blooms of Enchantress which they are cutting in considerable quantity. The stock was grown indoors all summer and is an evidence that this treatment suits that variety to perfection.

The Florists' Club meets tonight and nominates officers for next year.

There is a new grower at Maywood, Wm. Wichtendahl. He built two houses during the past summer and has them planted to the newest varieties of carnations. There are now four growers in one block at Maywood, Albert F. Amling, Hugo Luedtke, Henry Wehrman and Mr. Wichtendahl. They all ship to E. C. Amling.

The E. F. Winterson Co. reports business in Dutch bulbs to have opened in fine shape in the last few days.

Geo. Reinberg has put in seven Morehead return traps to dispose of condensation in his steam pipes and insure a better circulation. Peter Reinberg put in three of these machines early last spring and found them to work so satisfactorily that he has put in ten more this season. Several other growers in their vicinity are adopting the same device.

The daily papers are devoting considerable space to the retirement of Chas. J. Strombach as head gardener at Lincoln park. Mr. Strombach has been connected with the park for thirty-five years and is now given the position of consulting gardener. The new head gardener is Alois P. Frey, formerly of Hartford, Conn., where he has been in the florists' business. He has been Mr. Strombach's assistant for more than a year.

W. E. Lynch has spent his spare moments this summer in building a ribbon case at Hunt's and has demonstrated his qualifications for cabinet making. The case holds 2,500 bolts of ribbon.

Bassett & Washburn have all their tea roses grafted this year and Mr. Washburn calls attention to the difference between their first cut this season and the first cut when their stock was on its own roots as a visible evidence that the grafted stock has much advantage. They cut more heavily than from own root stock and the quality early in the season is decidedly superior.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. reports a large number of big decorations to be put up in the State street stores within the next week or two.

The Butler Floral Co. has opened a neat store at 291 Dearborn street. The active member of the concern is Miss Butler, who was formerly with Friedman.

John Muir opened his new store at 4647 Grand boulevard yesterday, sending out neat cards of invitation to an inspection of the very handsome establishment. The old place on Michigan avenue is still maintained, but is on the market.

Charlie Duerr is now located at Sedalia, Mo., with Gelven & Son. He has moved his family there.

Visitors: J. W. Schrader, Mattoon, Ill.; C. S. Ford, Philadelphia.

ANNOUNCEMENT TO THE TRADE

ON OCTOBER 1st, 1904, the undersigned firm will open a first-class Wholesale Jobbing Cut Flower and Florists' Supply Store at 58-60 Wabash Ave., Growers' Exchange. This will fill a long-felt want among the city buyers, inasmuch as we will carry a complete line of up-to-date Florists' Supplies and Requisites. All growers consigning stock to us should bear in mind that we are not strangers to the business by any means, as our Mr. Vaughan's experience extends over sixteen years in travel among the trade, soliciting orders in nearly every branch of the Horticulture and Florists' Supply business. Promptness and integrity of purpose is to be the watchword in all our business transactions, and we ask growers and buyers alike to give us a fair share of their business and we will "deliver the goods."

VAUGHAN & SPERRY, A. L. VAUGHAN, FRED SPERRY. 58-60 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO

RICHMOND, IND.

I spent a day in Richmond recently and had a very pleasant visit at several of the establishments there. At George Gause's place everything is in fine shape, the carnations all being planted and the roses making good growth. He has about the nicest bed of smilax I ever saw. A house 14x90 is being built for miscellaneous stock.

The E. G. Hill Co.'s place is in the usual fine condition. They were all through benching carnations some time ago and the plants all looked well. They have a large planting of Cardinal. I don't believe there are any finer mums than theirs. Aetna rose is in fine shape and is certainly a beauty, as is also the rose that was named for Mrs. English's daughter. They have a light pink rose of a little deeper shade than Golden Gate, the bud and flower of better shape and the foliage the finest I have ever seen on a rose, thick, leathery and glossy.

The B. K. & B. Floral Co. has a nice house of mums, clean and even in growth. Their carnations are all planted and have started nicely. I am much impressed with Richmond Gem and believe it will prove one of the best carnations sent out in years. They have a large stock.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

M. O. Austin & Co. have been in the nursery business at Norwood, Mo., for twelve years and have supplied stock for numberless orchards in the Ozark country. They report prospects good at present.

The Peterson Nursery, Chicago, has moved the business office from 170 La Salle street to the nursery grounds near Rose Hill, the down-town office being given to the landscape department, which is a rapidly growing branch of the business.

Ellwanger & Barry say that they cannot too forcibly direct attention to the rule that budded roses should be planted sufficiently deep so that the junction of the bud with the stock is from two to three inches below the surface of the soil.

E. N. Stitt has purchased the J. B. Laughlin nursery at College Springs, near Shenandoah, Ia.

The planting season is only a couple of weeks away and the nurseries making a specialty of ornamental stock have a busy time in prospect.

W. F. Schell, of Wichita, is in charge of the Kansas horticultural exhibit at the World's Fair. At his nursery he lost much stock in the July flood.

A good lawn shrub which is not used as much as it deserves is the high-bush cranberry, Viburnum Opulus. It flowers attractively in the latter part of May or June and in the fall is full of bright red berries, which hang on for a long time.

J. H. Hale, at Fort Valley, Ga., starts the heads of his peach trees from a foot to eighteen inches above ground. In general, they are headed back for two or three years after planting to make them stocky, but the branches growing near the base of the tree which produce the first fruit, and which the northern peach grower usually removes to give the tree a slick appearance, are left untouched until the tree is in full bearing. It is not unusual to see a two-year-old block with considerable fruit clustered near the base of each tree, while a year later these branches often bear half a carrier of high-grade peaches.

DEATH OF JACOB W. MANNING.

Jacob W. Manning, for many years proprietor of the well known Reading Nursery, died at his home, 134 High street, Reading, Mass., September 16, after an illness of several weeks' duration. He was born in Bedford, N. H., February, 1826, of old New England stock. Moving to Boston in 1844, he for several years had charge of various large estates in that city and vicinity. Later he was connected with the Winnisimmelt Nursery and removed to Reading and founded the present nursery in 1854.

The Reading Nursery earned a national reputation for trees, shrubs, choice fruits and perennial plants, Mr. Manning introducing large numbers of desirable plants from Europe and popularizing them. He was considered one of the best growers and authorities on evergreens in America and was one of the first to promote the horticultural adornment of estates in and around Boston. He spent much time traveling through the United States, studying horticultural effects and the laying out of private and public grounds.

Mr. Manning joined the Massachusetts Horticultural Society in 1849 and was for many years a very active member of it, being a constant exhibitor during nearly the whole of that long period and winning many medals and other premiums. His last exhibit was made only a few weeks ago and at that time the writer found him just as interested in his favorite plants as ever. He served on the American Pomological Society with Charles Downing, author of "Fruits of America," and on a number of occasions received Wilder medals, the highest award given by that society. He was one of the earliest and hardest working members of the American Forestry Association, as well as American Association of Nurserymen, Society of American Florists and other organizations. His death removes one of the last of the pioneer horticulturists of New England.

Mr. Manning leaves a widow and five sons, one of the latter being J. Woodward Manning, the well known landscape architect. The funeral services at Reading on September 19 were largely attended, there being many beautiful floral tokens.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

THERE still remain a few acres of onion sets to be harvested at Chicago.

ALFRED EMERICH, of Vilmorin-Andrieux & Co., Paris, arrived in New York September 17.

WHITE Pearl onion sets are in brisk demand at the south, the genuine article bringing a good price.

BOSTON seed merchants report bulb trade as very quiet to date, few counter orders having yet come in.

THE frosts of last week did serious damage to some of the cucumber and melon seed crops in southern Michigan.

THE Michigan radish crop is ripening very unevenly, parts of the fields showing well filled pods, while other parts are still in blossom.

IN northern Michigan and Wisconsin the pea growers are now busy receiving their product from the farmers and the milling of Alaskas and extra earlies has begun.

IT is announced that Miss Anna Hagemann, daughter of Wm. Hagemann, of Hagemann & Co., New York, will be married September 28 to Paul Kaese, of Hamburg, Germany.

REPORTS from the onion growing marshes of Ohio and Indiana are to the effect that the crop is of excellent quality, but only sixty per cent in quantity, as compared with normal years.

THE critical time for the bean crop is at hand. Good sunshiny weather for the next two weeks will help things along, while rainy weather will spoil the sample and shrink the quantity of merchantable stock.

VISITED CHICAGO:—S. B. Dicks, representing Cooper, Taber & Co., London, Eng.; Otto H. R. Weis, manager David Sachs, Quedlingburg, Germany; Hjalmar Hartmann, of Hjalmar Hartmann & Co., Copenhagen, Denmark.

MANY of the sweet corn growers feel sure of a fairly good crop. The frost reported last week did no serious damage in Iowa and Nebraska and with ordinarily good weather for a week or two there seems to be no doubt but that the crop will come up to the estimates of two weeks ago.

The government crop report says that of the thirteen principal clover seed producing states, four, namely, Wisconsin, Colorado, Utah and California, report increased acreages, while all the others report decreases. In Indiana, Iowa and Colorado conditions are below their ten-year averages, while all others report conditions above such averages.

BLOOMSDALE SEED FARM
BRISTOL, PA.
WHOLESALE ORDERS SOLICITED

D. H. Gilbert, Monticello, Fla., has about finished harvesting 300 acres of water melons for seed and the crop is very satisfactory, with the exception of some late plantings. Deliveries will not be short of 70 to 90 per cent and with most varieties full deliveries.

REPORTS in general indicate that much of the cucumber seed will be so light that it will blow out when being milled and that the outlook is not much better for a crop than at this time last year. In central Illinois, where the season was comparatively favorable for the fruits yielding heavy seed, the drying out process shows the product to be all of forty per cent light. It is thought that the sections farther north and west will show a much heavier percentage of light seed.

A WELL-KNOWN observer writing from Waterloo, Neb., September 12, said: "Generally speaking, muskmelon crops are very light, watermelon, pumpkin and winter squash late and uncertain. As for cucumber, there are some very good crops but many others are in poor condition and the yield depends to a considerable extent on the length of time before a killing frost. Early varieties of sweet and field corn will give good returns, while the later kinds are in danger of not maturing."

A. LE COQ & Co., Darmstadt, Germany, write that "the mild winter and the fine weather we had in the early spring were very favorable for the development of the plants and all prospects were for a very good harvest of grass seeds this year. But it turned out differently. In the latter part of the spring the temperature changed almost every day from cold to hot and vice versa. This, with the continued drouth during June and July have done much harm to the plants and the forming of seeds, so that we now (September 3) can only speak of an average crop."

CORN NOT HURT.

A. A. Berry, Clarinda, Ia., writes: "The frost in this section was very light and no damage was done to the corn or vine crops. It keeps the corn green, however, and there is a great deal that will be affected more or less with frost, which is bound to come before it can dry sufficiently."

J. W. Ratekin, Shenandoah, Ia., writes: "Regarding the reports of frost in the corn belt will say we have not had any killing frosts so far, although we have had cold nights which were close to it. Prospects in this neighborhood are for one of the best crops of corn for seed purposes we have ever had."

Telegraphic reports from points in Iowa and Nebraska are to the effect that on the night of September 20, while the thermometer reading was low, those states were covered by clouds, with good winds blowing, and frost was avoided.

THE YOUNGEST FLORIST.

Attention is called to B. G. Merritt, of Grange, Md., as a candidate for honors as the youngest florist owning and operating his own business. He is only 18 years old and, as he says, "not being old enough to be my own legally I have to add a 'Co.' to my name." It is B. G. Merritt & Co., the junior partner being the young man's father. They are growing nothing but carnations. Last year there were 1,600 feet of glass; this summer 600 more were added, the young man doing all the work himself.

Alonzo J. Bryan, of New Hampton, N. J., is one of the successful florists who deserves special mention because of his youth. He is now but 23 years of age and has been conducting his own business for five years. He does both a wholesale and retail business, mostly in the line of bedding and vegetable plants, the totals running into the hundreds of thousands each season. Mr. Bryan has just completed remodeling his principal greenhouses, having replaced the roof with much larger glass and otherwise improved the house.

The First Steps!

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."

MORRISTOWN, N. J.

A recent trip through Morristown, N. J., revealed the fact that the florists in that home of the millionaire are enjoying a fair share of prosperity. H. C. Holmes is having a new entrance and office built to connect with his houses and give him more room to attend to his constantly enlarging trade. The office is connected with the range of greenhouses by a handsome show house for palms and flowering stock and the contract is in the hands of Hitchings & Co. Roses, chrysanthemums and carnations all looked well and flourishing.

Mrs. Holton's establishment, on South street, looked as spick and span as usual. A large batch of mums were very nice. The larger growing houses are located at some distance from the store and we did not have time to go down there, but understand that carnations and roses are in good shape for the winter.

The real object of our expedition was a visit to some of the new private establishments that are every year increasing in numbers in this vicinity. Cedar Court, the residence of O. H. Kahn, was visited and the superintendent, Mr. Fraser, welcomed us most hospitably. Here we found J. Austin Shaw dining sumptuously on an old-fashioned vegetarian dinner of fried chicken and corn. Possibly the bracing country air was responsible for Mr. Shaw's fall from grace in thus partaking of the forbidden food, so we will be charitable.

Mr. Fraser has a chrysanthemum house full of all the newest varieties and all in splendid condition. Some of the hitherto unbeaten champions of Morris county will have to look after their laurels at the exhibitions this fall, for Mr. Fraser will exhibit quite largely. W. Duckham, F. A. Cobbold, Ben Wells, Mrs. Thirkell, F. S. Vallis and several other kinds are simply magnificent, and we may look for some phenomenal flowers from this grower.

Leaving Mr. Shaw regaling himself on plums, peaches, melons and several other side lines we made our way to another large estate in course of building, owned by Robert D. Foote. Here a large range of glass is in course of erection, some houses being already planted with roses, carnations and chrysanthemums. R. Vince is in charge and he has years of work ahead of him before the estate will be completed. Stock in the houses is in fine condition, particularly the carnations, and the new rose, Killarney, is thought very highly of. A large quantity of orchids has been purchased and will be on hand as soon as the houses are ready for their reception. An immense mansion is in course of erection, which will take several years to complete, and extensive Italian gardens and shrubberies are in contemplation.

The growth of country estates in this section is remarkable and the indications are that it will continue. Several other similar places were in our mind to visit, but an accident to the automobile delayed us too long and some time in the future we will continue our travels through what is probably one of the most beautiful sections of country in the eastern states. PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Trade the past week has been very good. General business is improving and, with a number of store openings, has made a very satisfactory week's business. McCreery & Co. opened their large department store. The event was much like a social affair. On Monday evening they entertained the newspaper men and Tuesday evening the blue ribbon crowd. Wednesday morning they opened their store for inspection to the public. They had the entire store decorated with vases of cut flowers for all these occasions. A. W. Smith had this contract, as well as the Surprise Clothing Co.'s decoration.

Geddis & Blind Bros. had the decorations for the Jos. Horne Co. The whole store as well as the dining-room, which occupies the sixth floor, was elaborately decorated with vases of Beauties, asters, dahlias and gladioli. The same firm has decorated Kaufmann Bros.' large store, using laurel and plants as well as flowers.

Various Notes.

Julius Ludwig has displayed great taste in arranging a scrap book of clippings for floral illustrations which he has been collecting for some time. The work is interesting and valuable as well as beautiful.

The large mills in this section have been piling up thousands of car loads of coke to have on hand in case of miners' strikes; so Fred Burki, who is always up to the times, developed another gas well for the Pittsburg Rose & Carnation Co., which came in last Friday. The well is 1,800 feet deep, with a rock pressure of 150 pounds. This is the third well on Crystal farm. Mr. Burki says they have mums to cut any time now.

W. B. Ague, the Liberty Market florist, is giving up a portion of his time now, acting as judge for the civic clubs in awarding prizes for the best kept gardens and lawns in our suburban towns.

P. S. Randolph, Samuel McClements and Geo. Marshall were some of the florists who took advantage of the fine weather Tuesday and ran down to Brunot's Island to see the ponies go.

Mrs. E. A. Williams, who can now boast of an entire new greenhouse plant, has the only florists' exhibit at the Pittsburg exposition.

Anthony Smith has returned from the lakes full of stored up energy which you will hear from this winter. No one has anything on Andy when it comes to getting business.

The visitors the past week were J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati; A. Langhans, Wheeling, W. Va.; Wm. Craig and E. J. Fancourt, Philadelphia. Hoo-Hoo.

HANDLING LARGE PALMS.

There are several reasons why it is advisable for the nurseryman to have a lot of good-sized palms in tubs or boxes for retailing during the planting season as well as for growing or for large decorations. I have found that the public generally does not object to paying fully twenty per cent more for a specimen palm planted in a box or tub than for a tree just dug from the ground. In the first place it makes the plant look much larger and in the second there is not so much danger in transplanting. I have met many men who called themselves gardeners but who were unable to handle a spade with skill enough to take a palm out of the ground without killing it.

And now a few words regarding the best season and ways to transplant palms. The best selling hardy sorts are as follows: Phoenix Canariensis, Chamærops excelsa and C. Napoliensis, Brahea filamentosa, Washingtonia robusta, Erythea edulis and Washingtonia sonorea. These varieties are all hardy here. All the phœnix family are a little difficult to transplant unless taken in the early spring, just before their growing season commences. It is unnecessary to give them a large ball of earth and the only thing to remember is to move them into a shade house as soon as possible after taking them up and I have found it a good plan to tie up the foliage for a month or so. I have taken plants five feet high from the open ground that were only four years old from seed and put them in boxes each 8x8x12 inches and retailed them at $7 to $10 each, and to grow the same palm in a pot for the same space of time would not give a specimen over half that height. This is where the advantage comes in having them transplanted into boxes when they are large enough to dispose of at a good price.

Any of the varieties of chamærops grown here can be taken up at any time and boxed with perfect safety, but not so with washingtonias or braheas. There is only one rule to follow in transplanting them and that is to cut off all the leaves except a center one and put in a shade house in the early spring. In this way I have handled hundreds without losing any. To make an effort to keep the foliage usually results in the plant going back. This rule will apply to all our native fan palms.

Certainly we handle a great quantity of palms here that are taken from the ground with balls of earth and sold in that way, but there is always a risk in handling them and I think it is more satisfactory all around to box a few hundred palms from the open ground and keep them in boxes a few months until they become salable. It does not pay to raise a stock of palms by shifting from one size to another as they make such a headway in the open ground that, if a little care is taken at the proper season, there is no difficulty in having salable plants on hand at all times. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The very hot weather of last week has had the effect of cutting off the aster supply and, as we are not yet quite into the fullness of chrysanthemum time, there is somewhat of a dearth of flowers. The trade generally feels sorry that asters are gone as they are a most satisfactory flower. Chrysanthemums come under the same heading and we will all be glad when they are received in quantity. Of course, I refer to those grown outdoors, as we have had the hothouse grown stock in market for several weeks. But they do not make the flower popular and it is only when the masses of the people see them that they displace everything else for the time being.

Carnations are scarce and roses have hardly held their own during the recent heated spell. Some late varieties of amaryllis are seen. Sweet peas are getting very short of stem and coreopsis, gaillardias and marigolds have "gone where the woodbine twineth."

Business, in comparison with that of a year ago, is a trifle better and if the cool weather returns, in a few weeks more we will be well into the season when the florists do not have to worry as to whether they will be able to meet expenses.

Various Notes.

Last Friday a meeting of the California State Floral Society was held and a very good collection of seasonable flowers was shown. R. Lichtenberg exhibited about 200 different seedlings.

On the same evening the Society Hortensia of Oakland had a very good exhibit of dahlias and other late blooming annuals. There was a large attendance from both sides of the bay.

John McLaren, superintendent of Golden Gate park, returned this week from his European trip. G.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The second annual fall exhibition of the New Bedford Horticultural Society was held in City Hall on September 15, 16 and 17 and was a pronounced success in every way. The quality of exhibits was much superior to that of a year ago.

For best group of plants H. H. Rogers, James Garthly, gardener, was first, H. A. Jahn second and T. M. Stetson, Wm. Keith, gardener, third. The last named also secured three first premiums in other plant classes.

There was a grand display of dahlias, numerous classes being devoted to them. For sixty distinct varieties arranged for effect, W. C. Winter won the silver cup from five other contestants. E. H. Weber won the cup for thirty varieties. Other sucessful dahlia exhibitors were F. L. Tinkham, J. K. Alexander, W. D. Hathaway, A. J. Fish, J. Sullivan, Wm. Keith, H. A. Jahn, E. I. Lawrence and others. Some sixteen dahlia classes were also devoted to amateurs, these being well contested. Other seasonable flowers and fruits also made a good display.

F. R. Pierson Co. showed several plants of the Tarrytown fern, which were much admired.

The executive committee in charge of the exhibition were Wm. Keith, A. J. Fish and H. A. Jahn. The judges were J. F. M. Farquhar and W. C. Winter.

Martinsville, Ind.—Nixon H. Gano has rebuilt the entire plant of the Martinsville Floral Co., moved the office, dug a flower cellar and walled it with concrete, dug and water-proofed a boiler pit, etc. The place is now in nice shape.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Godfrey Aschmann has completed his two new Lord & Burnham houses, and also has built a new thirty-foot brick chimney. The new houses are full of araucarias and ficus, the other stock being spread out to fill the space left vacant, for there is always something coming on at this place to fill any available room. A third new house will be put up at once for the azaleas soon to arrive.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during the last two weeks has not been up to expectations with most of our retail men. Some, however, claim that they are doing as much as they could expect at this season of the year, while a select few say they are busy. Toronto trade is usually quiet for a week or two after the exhibition, as most of our city people have had to expend considerable of their surplus cash entertaining their country cousins during that time. This year was no exception, as our national exhibition was the largest in the history of the fair and the extra attendance of out-of-town people was very marked. We feel indebted to W. S. for the write-up he gave our fair. Of course, we do not think that he was the only American citizen who had similar views.

In regard to cut flowers, roses and carnations are still scarce and the quality nothing extra, yet we notice continual improvement which is very encouraging. Asters have been in great supply and gladioli have been very plentiful. These, with other small stuff, have helped to fill in for funeral work and decoration.

Among the growers, we find them to be busy getting their stock in shape for the winter and with most of them everything looks very promising. Retailers are renovating their stores and generally doing their season's house cleaning. Noticeable among these is Dunlop's King street store, which will be beautifully decorated. Jay & Son are giving their store a coat of paint. D. J.

Kansas City, Mo.—R. S. Brown & Son will have a little more room this season, having added an area 50x150 feet to their glass. Business has been very good with them, usually right up to their facilities.

TESTIMONIAL.

CROMWELL, CONN., April 18, '04.

BAUR & SMITH,

Indianapolis, Ind.

Gentlemen:—We have grown your carnation Indianapolis this past year, and while we have had small plants they have shown themselves good producers of good quality bloom. The color has been very pleasing and it should prove a good commercial variety.

Very truly yours,

A. N. PIERSON.

Per W. R. P.

We have about 5000 fine Field-Grown Plants to sell this Fall at $12 per 100; $100 per 1000. First come, first served.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The weather conditions continue as varied as Joseph's proverbial coat of many colors, cloudy and cold today, warm and muggy tomorrow, followed by storms. The storm Saturday night blew down not only sturdy oaks, but a ventilator out at C. R. Hill's. It traveled over into an adjoining house, while the rain came down in torrents.

Business would be dull were it not for frequent funerals and shipping orders. Roses are plentiful and quality improving. The stems are much longer now. Carnations are still scarce, very few being allowed to bloom as yet. Planting is finished.

Alfred Hanna has just finished a new violet house and has about finished summer repairs.

Freyling & Mendals open their downtown store October 1. They have space at Cole's glove store.

Charles Chadwick is scheduled for downtown, but the date of opening and location are not yet announced.

Mr. Thornton, of H. A. Dreer's, is in town with wife and family. While ostensibly on pleasure bent, he is not averse to booking your order for anything you need in their line.

It is fair week and once again the florists are expected to help out the show from patriotic motives, if nothing else. The Grand Rapids Floral Co. will do what they can, as will Henry Smith, and Crabb & Hunter.

Wencil Cukirski, superintendent of parks, has laid out the grounds with a view of planting shrubbery for the future. He has also planted seven large flower beds in various parts of the grounds. This is a good beginning and another year it will be continued on a more extensive scale. G. F. C.

BLOOMINGTON, IND.—James Cain has bought out the Rott Floral Co. and will continue the business as the Cain Floral Co.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.—The property formerly owned by W. C. Eger has passed into the hands of W. T. Hanson and will be used for residence purposes.

...FALL... BARGAINS!

We wish to call your attention to the following low quotations, considering the quality, which we guarantee as represented:

CHINESE PRIMROSES—From the very best European strains. We have always given satisfaction with these, and a trial order will convince. Thrifty plants, ready for a shift, from 2¼-inch pots, in white, light pink, blue and bright red. $3.00 per 100; from 3-inch pots, in above colors, $5.00 per 100.

PRIMULA FORBESII GRANDIFLORA—A large flowered type of Forbesii, much stronger in growth, longer stemmed and flowers double the usual size. From 2¼-inch pots, $3.00 per 100.

NEPHROLEPIS BOSTONIENSIS—Thrifty plants of this favorite fern that have had a full season's growth, and a bargain to any Florist. From 2¼-inch pots, $4.00 per 100; 2½-inch pots, $6.00 per 100; 3-inch pots, $8.00.

NEPHROLEPIS PIERSONI—Plants from 2¼-inch pots of same quality as Bostons, $4.00 per 100.

NEPHROLEPIS CORDATA COMPACTA—Thrifty plants of this old-time favorite, from 2¼-inch pots, $4.00 per 100; 2½-inch pots, $6.00 per 100; 3-inch pots, $8.00 per 100.

POINSETTIA PULCHERRIMA—Vigorous plants from late struck cuttings, ready for shift. From 2½-inch pots, $5.00 per 100.
